BURY THEIR GOLD

Natives of East India Have No Use for Banks.

Vast Treasures Hidden and the Secret Confided to Those Who Cannot Divulge It.

Doctor Vogel, a former superintendent of the archeological survey in India, has been telling us that the preservation of public monuments in India is largely dependent on public opinion. It is due to the reverence and the religious spirit of the people that so much has escaped destruction, he says. But this spirit of reverence is responsible for more than the preservation of monuments; it is responsible for losses. Great treasures have vanished through fidelity and other qualities maintaining the secret of their hiding place.

It is the habit today of natives of India to bury gold. Only the year before the war it was authoritatively stated that nearly all the gold dug from the earth in South Africa is, by a fresh digging occupation, deposited again beneath the soil of India. That is what we may call a piece-meal operation; but imagine the operation conducted upon a wholesale scale!

Such things happened during the troublous days of war and conflict and raid which preceded British rule. A wealthy prince or merchant, fearing armed robbery, would deposit all his gold and jewels, not in his house or in a bank, for houses and banks could be pillaged like a bazaar; no, he concealed his riches in the earth, in caverns in the hills, among the haunts of tigers and poisonous snakes.

The practice was to entrust the secret of the deposit only to the poorest and lowliest, and that for various reasons. In the first place, there was the belief in native fidelity; then there was the expectation that people so poor would not covet rich treasure, and would be suspected if they did try to dispose of it; and, finally, there was the knowledge that people of such humble caste would not be allowed to converse with people of higher caste to whom the hoarded wealth would be of worth.

In this way the very outcasts of the people became guardians of wealth untold, hidden by their fleeing lords, who, often enough, did not survive the broils and battles to return and reclaim their buried property.

The late Sir Maurice Gerard, who spent many years in India and investigated the subject, declared that enormous treasures are buried in some of the old Indian hill forts. The guardians are dead and the secret is dead with them.

Sir Maurice himself knew of places to which treasure traditions cling. One fastness in the Goona district was that in which, during the Mahratta warfare days, the entire population of three villages, hiding with their possessions in a hill cave, were betrayed to enemies by the barking of dogs.

Refusing to surrender, the refugees were smoked to death by fires lighted at the entrance to their retreat. No native dare enter now for fear of the demons which are believed to haunt the place.

Several English dogs were once sent in to hunt through the enchanted cave. All disappeared. Several days later the smallest of the lot, a terrier, came out starving. The others had perished, but it is supposed that this one, falling down a fissure, had found its way to a jackal's home and scratched its way out to liberty.

Not Exactly.

Aunt Jane, who was a spinster, came to visit her sister and family of four children. And from the very first auntie was very much given to offering advice to her sister on the way to feed, dress and treat her children generally. The sister listened in perfect good humor, but not so Sally, her efficient helper. And frankly, Sally said so. "Look here, Miss Jane," she began, "what do old maids like you and me know about raising children? We hain't never had none and a person has to have children to know how to raise them."

Aunt Jane smiled a tolerant smile. "Oh, not always, Sally," she returned. "Now, take those little chickens out there. Don't you think you know more than their mother? You feed—"

But Sally interrupted her. "Yes, ma'am, I feed them, if that's what you mean. But I hain't never yet taught any of them to scratch—have I?"—Indianapolis News.

EDITORS FAVOR SMOKING

Result of Recent Query Sent to 13,000 Publishers.

If this is to be made a smokeless world, it will have to be accomplished without the aid and consent of the editors, says the Los Angeles Times. A recent query on the subject was addressed to 13,000 publishers and newspaper men of the nation. Of the nearly 8,000 answers thus far received, 7,393 were of the belief that an anti-tobacco crusade was futile and inadvisable. More than 90 per cent were emphatic in the belief that the sentiment of their community discouraged any special war against tobacco. "If a man wants to smoke, let him do it." That is the opinion of 96 per cent of the editors of America, according to the returns thus far received. It would seem that that ought to settle it. But wait till we hear from the sharp-nosed lady reformers. They have made their minds up differently.

Fearful Case of Cruelty.

Louie Blackman, white, aged thirty five years, engaged in small farming and peddling, was arrested at his home, two miles this side of Warrenville, last Wednesday night, charged with atrocious cruelty to his horse. The animal when found, had been stabbed several times in the breast, one of his legs were broken, and the creature had been fearfully burnt from a bed of pine straw set ablaze beneath him by his owner. Neighbors told Sheriff Howard that the man had repeatedly stabbed the horse with his pitchfork, and then carried straw on the fork, and placed it underneath him, setting it afire; the horse being tied fast to a tree.

When found blackman was asleep in the woods, and appeared to be under the influence of some drug or intoxicant. Before Magistrate W. M. Raborn at Alken, Thursday he was fined the limit in such cases, $100.00. Some of the neighbors had in mercy, shot the horse when they found its fearful condition.—Aiken Journal.
