Have You Got Money in the Bank?

People do get sick. There is plenty of work for the doctor always. Suppose you get sick and couldn't earn any money, but had to spend more. What would you do? You'd worry yourself more sick. You would fret for those you love.

But if you had a nice sum of money in the bank you could rest easy knowing that those dependent upon you were well cared for.

FIGHTING THE BOLL WEEVIL

Intelligence, Courage, and Optimism Needed by Farmers.

Clemson College, Dec. 5.—In spite of the efforts of scientists employed by the various Southern States and the United States Department of Agriculture, and in spite of the various climatic conditions encountered over the cotton growing states, the cotton boll weevil has annually extended its operations, the advance line of this pest having now moved entirely across South Carolina, leaving the state infested from the mountains to the coast. Fortunately for the farmers of South Carolina, says W. W. Long, Director of the Extension Service, we are able to draw lessons from the experience of other states over a period of nearly thirty years, the boll weevil having entered Texas in 1892. This should enable us to avoid many of the costly mistakes that have been made over and over again by the cotton growers of the states further west.

Clemson Agricultural College and the United States Department of Agriculture have made special studies of the boll weevil problem, co-operating with every agency interested along this line. At frequent intervals reliable information has been issued with the view of keeping our people thoroughly informed regarding this pest and the methods of fighting it. In 1916 the College was instrumental in organizing the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission, which went into the infested states of Louisiana and Mississippi and studied the weevil at first hand under conditions similar to those prevailing in this state. The report of the Commission issued by Clemson in November, 1916, as Bulletin No. 20, contained practically all the reliable information of importance that had been developed regarding the boll weevil problem. This report had a wide circulation and was considered to be so thorough and accurate that the United States Senate published it in February, 1917, as a Senate Document. This document is now available in revised form. Many other bulletins, reports, and special articles dealing with specific phases of the problem have been issued from time to time. The Extension Service, through the county agent system, has kept this information before the people constantly. As a result the average farmer of South Carolina is without doubt better informed in the practical phases of this subject than has been the case in any other state at the time of the arrival of the boll weevil.

No Time for Depressed Feeling. Other states have had this problem to face, and while they suffered severely they have demonstrated that there are ways of dealing with the boll weevil problem. Cotton is being grown in spite of the boll weevil. This is not the time, therefore, to permit ourselves to become depressed and pessimistic. Instead, we must study the problem thoroughly and learn the methods and practices which enable other farmers to produce cotton profitably under boll weevil conditions.

Before relying upon boll weevil information, we must be sure that it comes from a source that can and does disseminate reliable information. By studying information from reliable sources and adapting it to our particular needs we can adjust ourselves much more quickly and economically to the new conditions enforced by the boll weevil. We can not rely upon information based upon one year's experience with the boll weevil. The best information is that based on many years of experience such as the states west of Alabama have had. These states have had time to adjust themselves to new conditions and to adopt new farm practices, whereas the newly infested sections are still floundering around from one thing to another in an effort to find remedies for the boll weevil.

There is no single new crop which promises to take the place of cotton as our money crop. There is no combination of crops which can be recommended as a specific. Experiment has shown that cotton continues to be grown as the chief money crop in the cotton states already infested by the weevil. It would be well, therefore, for us to continue to grow cotton, using the best boll weevil control measures and to undertake the growing of new money crops only on a conservative scale. Plunging on new unknown money crops brings on problems that are as hard to solve as is the problem of growing cotton under boll weevil conditions. We must simply adapt ourselves to the changed aspects of farming and meet new conditions with suitable methods.

New Publications to Help. Extension Bulletin 48, "Farming Under Boll Weevil Conditions," has been published by the Extension Service to aid in the fight against the boll weevil. This bulletin brings together in concise form much of the information that has been developed by the experience with the weevil up to the present time in the various states infested. Copies may be obtained from county agents or from the Extension Service, Clemson College. The revised edition of the Report of the South Carolina Boll Weevil Commission may be had from the same sources.

An Old-Timer.

A new guard was on duty at the prison, and was conducting a prisoner to his cell.

They came to a corner of the corridor, which owing to alterations being made, was rather dark, a screen being over the nearest window.

"Look out," warned the guard, "There's a step there."

"Out your cackle, mate!" muttered the prisoner; "I knew that step before you were born."
