

NEGRO REAL CAVE MAN

Inhabits Dugout Far Up in the Rockies Above Cripple Creek.

Cripple Creek, Cal., May 8.—The "Cave Man of the Rockies" has been discovered in the hills west of this city, in the person of Dave Marsh, an 87-year old negro.

For a score of years, Marsh, a former slave, has led practically a hermit life, making his abode in an underground tunnel in a hill side facing Mount Pisgah, two miles west of Cripple Creek.

The tunnel, blasted from solid rock by some early day old mine prospector, burrows into the mountain for a distance of more than 40 feet.

The subterranean home of the aged cave man is dark as a dungeon and is only about three feet high, its entire distance. Marsh does all his cooking on a stone fire at the entrance to the cave and has to crawl on his hands and knees into the dark passage by the light of a candle to reach his tumble down bed.

Marsh, in his 20 year cave career has developed an interesting philosophy of life. "A happy life near God" is the way he puts it and declares he would not forsake the cave for the "best house ever built by a white man." In proof of which he has refused to occupy a well furnished shack erected for him near the edge of the tunnel by Teller county authorities.

Marsh says he was born in North Carolina and was raised in slavery. Nearly 30 years ago he came West. In the boom days of Cripple Creek he prospected for a time in the "greatest gold camp in the world" but had but little success and 20 years ago he forsook the hurly burly of the wicked world to become the original "Cave Man of the Rockies."

The old negro spends much of his time during the daylight hours in reading the Bible, sitting at the entrance of his strange home.

"I try to follow the teaching of the holy book," he declared. I keep my brain clear by living near nature and living in the open keeps me in good health."

The heavy snows and blizzards that descend upon Cripple Creek during the winter have no terror for the cave man. After a severe storm he quietly digs himself out, removes the snow from around the cave mouth and re-builds his fire over which his frugal meals are prepared, consisting chiefly of rabbits, birds and vegetables.

Hail Does Damage

Patrick, May 22.—This vicinity was visited by a severe hailstorm about noon last Thursday and considerable damage is reported to crops, especially cotton. The most damage seems to have been to the earlier cotton which had been brought to a stand. Some farmers have planted over and some are considering planting other crops, as the cotton was practically all destroyed.

The hail stones were about the size of marbles and fell to such an extent that the ground was covered and remained on the ground for several hours.

Fruit has been damaged a good deal also, quite a lot of peaches, plums and cherries being beaten off the trees and more injured by bruises caused by the hail stones.

This is the heaviest hail that has been witnessed in this section in many years.

Courteous Motoring

It is generally recognized that courtesy and safety in motoring are closely allied. For this reason much current safety instruction takes the form of establishing rules of courtesy for the highway. An eastern paper recently offered eight suggestions for the approval of motorists.

These rules include such matters as permitting a car to pass one from the rear without assuming that the driver of the swifter car is looking for a race. It is possible that he is on important business. Another point is fairness in keeping to one's own share of the road so that no other car need be crowded or inconvenienced unnecessarily. Stealing a parking place by pushing in just as another driver is preparing to back in, or by shoving some one else's car along the curb to make room for one's own, is regarded as discourteous. Cutting directly in front of a car one has just passed, honking continually when halted necessarily in a traffic jam and omitting or giving hand signals carelessly are all discourteous.

These little matters of courtesy, if omitted, open the way for all sorts of accidents, both minor and serious. The thoughtfulness and caution needed in their observance make for careful driving and inspire good will in other drivers met on the road.—Sumter Item.
