In the public life of his state, but in many respects has been but slightly known outside of the counties of Lee and Sumter.

In those two counties, one the county of his birth and the other the county of his adoption, by reason of Lee's being formed from Sumter, Darlington and Kershaw, Mr. McLeod has spent the greater part of his life and, as a private citizen and otherwise, has contributed his mite towards the advancement of humanity.

Mr. McLeod is largely of Scotch descent, although in the great melting pot of America it takes but a few generations for the English, the Scotch and other nationalities to lose their individuality and to become American and American only.

Thomas Gordon McLeod was born at Lynchburg, in what was Sumter county, December 17, 1868. His father was William James McLeod and his mother was Amanda Rogers McLeod.

The youth's early days were spent in and about the village of Lynchburg, where he attended the frame school building that has sent forth to the world a United States senator; a college president; a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church; two merchants of prominence, in addition to the subject of this story.

Among the early teachers of Mr. McLeod were Mrs. M. E. McDonald, Miss Lina McLeod, Prof. J. Fleming Brown, Rev. H. P. Garriss, Dr. John C. Buchanan and others.

By the time he was 16 young McLeod was prepared for college, but deferred going away to school for three years, working in a store in his native town. He later entered Wofford Fitting school, where under the instruction of Prof. A. G. Rembert he was prepared for entrance to Wofford college.

In 1892 he was graduated from Wofford college. Among his classmates who have since earned a high place in the limelight among South Carolinians are Dr. D. W. Daniel, of Clemson college, known as one of the most attractive after-dinner speakers in the state.

Mr. McLeod was largely interested in college activities while at Wofford, although he modestly states that he did not excel in any decided branch of study while a student there. He was a member of the Kappa Alpha fraternity and also of the Calhoun Literary society. He was honored with the presidency of the Calhoun society, and on one occasion won the essay medal offered by this organization.

Two things pertaining to Mr. McLeod are said to have marked his college days. The first was that he was always possessed of the same humorous vein which has stood him in good hand throughout his life. The second striking thing, and which, in a measure at least, may be attributed to the first, was that he was decidedly popular with the students. The number of friends made is looked back to by Mr. McLeod with greater pleasure than any scholastic achievements he might have earned.

Following graduation Mr. McLeod taught for two years in Sumter county, being in charge of Bethel academy and also of Line academy.

In the summer of 1894 he took a summer course in law at the University of Virginia. At this time his father's health gave way and young McLeod gave up the study of law and assisted in the management of his father's business. He remained at Lynchburg and at Sumter, where he studied law in the office of Judge R. O. Purdy.

Young McLeod went home in 1898 when his father died, leaving Mr. McLeod as the mainstay of his stepmother and four smaller children. It might be stated here that Mr. McLeod's mother died when he was but 10 years of age, while his stepmother, who, to a large extent, at least, took the place of his own mother, died in 1901.

Mr. McLeod was first elected to public office in 1901, when he was elected to the legislature from Sumter county by one of the largest votes ever given a candidate in that county. Of the total cast in the county Mr. McLeod received all but 100 votes.

In 1902 Lee county was established, taking in the section of Sumter county in which Mr. McLeod resided. He was elected state senator from Lee county, serving four years. In 1906 Mr. McLeod made his first race in a state campaign, being elected lieutenant governor and was re-elected in 1908.

Two years later, in 1910, Mr. McLeod was a candidate for governor and lacked but a small margin of being in the second race with Cole L. Blease, who was elected governor for the first time that year. C. C. Featherstone came second to Mr. Blease and Mr. McLeod was third in the first primary. Mr. Blease defeated Mr. Featherstone in the second primary.

Since that time Mr. McLeod has not held any public office, devoting his time to the practice of law and farming. During the World war he was chairman of the Lee county draft board. He was elected president pro tem of the Democratic state convention this year. Both after and before this convention he received many requests that he run for governor, but it was only after careful consideration that he launched into the race, determined to fight to the finish in the effort to win.

Mr. McLeod joined the Methodist church when he was but 10 years old, and is now a member of the Bethlehem Methodist church of Bishopville. His pastor is the Rev. W. V. Dibble. A brother of Mr. McLeod, Rev. D. Melvin McLeod, is pastor of a Methodist church at Marion. Mr. McLeod's father was a Confederate soldier, being captain of Company E, Sixth South Carolina Regiment of Volunteers, and although a warrior, was a religious, God-fearing individual. Mr. McLeod is a steward of his church and is also the teacher of the men's Bible class.

Mr. McLeod has always been active in farmer's organizations. He was a pioneer in the cooperative marketing movement.

In 1905 Mr. McLeod formed a partnership with Robert E. Dennis, of Bishopville, and the two have been practicing law together since that time.

December 31, 1902, Mr. McLeod was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Alford, of Dillon, who was the daughter of Capt. W. McD. Alford and Mrs. Sara E. McLean Alford. They have four children: Alford McD., who is blind and has been partially educated at Cedar Springs, but is now at home. He is 19 years of age; Thomas Gordon, Jr., is 17 years of age and will enter Wofford college this fall. Miss Lucy Mood McLeod, 15 years of age, is in the high school at Bishopville. Yancy Alford, 12 years of age, is also in school at Bishopville.

The Result in South Carolina.

Hon. Cole L. Blease did not "come back" in South Carolina politics. He has not only been defeated for the governorship, but he has shown weakness in former strongholds which indicate that he is not now the "political idol" of men who in the past have stuck unquestionably to him and his fortunes; else that the woman voter is arrayed against him to the fatal point.

Mr. Blease has been a stormy petrel in South Carolina affairs. From a humble station—we have seen it stated that he started in life as a drayman in Newberry—he made his way through the lower offices, administrative and legislative, to the high place of chief magistrate of his state. Without ability; without merit to secure a following; without attributes to win friends and supporters, he could not have done that. He is necessarily a man of force; of ability; and of political sagacity. He won for governor when every newspaper in the state, with one or two exceptions, opposed him. In the highest office in such a splendid state as South Carolina, he made mistakes. It is principally charged that he was a partisan governor and that he was a Blease executive of the Blease faction. It is true that he stuck to his friends—to his political friends. He said things and he did things which regular Democrats alleged as un-Democratic. He made of his political enemies—bitter enemies. However, following defeat and partial retirement, he again came before the people. Again he secured a great vote, leading in the first primary. South Carolina, however, had finally gotten out of patience with him. Practically every vote not a Blease vote in the first primary was an anti-Blease vote, and, in the second primary, Blease went down in unmistakable defeat.

It may have been that South Carolina is more pro-McLeod than anti-Blease. McLeod bears all the earmarks of an able, earnest, sincere, sterling man of the highest worth. He is not unknown to Carolina public life, and his record is excellent in every way. His utterances in the campaign and his announcements after the balloting and when his triumph was shown, have been well directed—words such as inspire confidence.

South Carolina has every reason to believe that the successor governor of the state is a man finely fitted and patriotically bent to give his people an alert, business-like and enterprising and safe administration of affairs. —Augusta Chronicle.

Coleman to Run Next Time.

William C. Coleman, candidate for governor of South Carolina in the first primary, announced Monday that he would be in the race again in 1924. Mr. Coleman issued a lengthy statement, in which he declared that McLeod is the representative of northern wealth, and Blease the representative of his friends, and that the people of the state are sorely in need of one of their friends in the executive office, meaning of course that he is that friend.

Liquor Teaches Another Lesson.

The Rockingham Post-Dispatch says: One night last week detective Tom Crabtree, of the Raleigh police force, was shot down by a young white drunk, Charles Klutz, who after shooting once, jumped from his car and shot him again, then drove a heavy Cadillac car over the body of the fallen officer. Crabtree died in the hospital Saturday, and such was the crowd that desired to attend his funeral that it had to be held in the huge city auditorium Sunday, 300 people attending. At the grave four white robed K. K. men placed a floral design on the grave, the three capital letters emblazoned in red flowers on a background of white roses. Scarcely had the officer died before a subscription was circulated over Raleigh with the idea of raising $5,000 as a first fund for his needy wife and children.

This detective was in the discharge of his duty, and was shot down by a drunken bully without a chance of protecting himself. His death, however, will serve to awaken the Raleigh citizens to the necessity of a more strict law enforcement—and it is but an object lesson to the people of all the state to be vigilant in this respect, and wage an energetic campaign to stamp out the liquor traffic. Rockingham and Richland county are doing this very thing now and our people must stick behind the officers and let the blindtiger and whiskey manufacturing element thoroughly understand that this kind of business must stop!

He: "I had a good joke to tell you this evening, but I see you are not in a condition to receive it."
She: "Why?"
He: "Because if your face lights up the powder will go off."
