

SIXTEEN CENTS GASOLINE

Wall Street Hears That Ford Will Dominate the Market.

Wall Street hears that Henry Ford is about to deal a master stroke that will greatly affect the automobile business and the oil industry as well. Certain well-informed men, who watch Ford movements closely, understand the flivver maker is negotiating for oil properties, planning to produce crude oil in huge quantities, refining it into gasoline and sell to Ford car drivers only at 16 cents a gallon. The plan, Wall Street financiers point out, is logical and economically sound.

According to current financial information gasoline now retailing in New York district at 22 cents a gallon, is manufactured at around 10 cents. Assuming this to be true, Henry Ford, with his own oil wells, could sell gasoline for 16 cents at a substantial profit.

Announcement of 16-cent gasoline to Ford owners exclusively would create unprecedented demands for Ford cars. Ford gas stations would take away much of the trade of stations now operating at a profit.

Crude oil and refined oil prices, Wall Street thinks, would necessarily tumble to meet Ford prices. This would bring a price cutting war and reduction of prices all along the line. The entire industry would have to be reorganized to meet the new condition, and independent oil companies in that event might join with Standard Oil to fight the invader.

Mrs. John Wallace Riddle, wife of the United States Ambassador to Argentina, maintains under her maiden name of Theodate Pope an architect's office of Madison avenue, New York, where she employs a staff of men to carry out her ideas.
