Speed and Suspicion

An automobile manufacturer recently received a visit from a party of distinguished tourists, and for their entertainment had a complete car assembled in something like ten minutes. The daily papers published this feat and a few days later the manufacturer received a telephone call asking if it was true that he had assembled a car in ten minutes. "Yes," replied the manufacturer, "why?" "Oh, nothing," was the calm reply, "only I've got the car."—Vibrator.
