TRAPPER IS FREED
 Was Accused of Killing Woman in Far Northwest
 Baudette, Minn., June 11.—After six months incarceration, Tony Reamer, North woods trapper, was free today to return to the woods that had been his home for several years, exonerated by a grand jury of any connection with the death last fall in the Northwest Angle Club of Mrs. Dean Wheeler.
 The decision of the grand jury left unsolved the unusual death of Mrs. Wheeler, whose body was found with a knife plunged through her side lying on the floor of the cabin which she and her husband as homesteaders, made their home two weeks after their marriage.
 Found dead by her husband and a friend last November 13, word of the tragedy was brought to Warroad, the nearest outpost, by a courier who spent several days making a circuitous route around the large lake of the woods, which being half frozen, could not be crossed by boat or sled.
 Mrs. Wheeler's death was pronounced a suicide by a coroner's jury. Later investigation, however, indicated that the woman might have been slain while her husband was absent from the cabin.
 With the Wheeler cabin, 160 miles beyond the frontier, investigation of the woman's death was a slow and tedious process. After several trips into the woods by various investigators, some traveling by dog sled and some making the trip in snow shoes, it was determined, according to officials, that Reamer was the last man to have seen Mrs. Wheeler alive.
 A search of the woods was begun and after several weeks, hearing that he was wanted by the authorities, Reamer gave himself up and said he did not fear to stand trial.

Time To Look for Another Job
 Rock Hill Record: "Bill" Nye, the young man who, some time ago, fell from the top floor of the Citizens Bank building, had a similar experience again Monday, falling from the mezzanine floor through the elevator shaft to the basement. He again broke the fall by catching and was not seriously hurt. With the exception of a considerable scalp wound in the back of his head he shows no signs of having been hurt. The fall was caused by the turning of a scaffold board.

How Banks Help a Community
 (The following is one of a series of articles issued by the Public Education Committee of the American Institute of Banking, and is here reproduced in order that the banking public and the bankers can better understand one the other, and create a co-operative spirit between depositor and banker.)
 Banks help the community in numerous ways. I will mention only a few of them. Banks provide a safe place for the deposit of money until needed. Deposited in the vaults of the bank, money is protected against robbery, fire and carelessness. Consider a moment the hazard of transacting business if you had to use the actual cash in all transactions. You would invite robbery and sometimes murder. Carried on the person or left in the house, cash would be lost or destroyed by fire—deposited in a bank, it is safe.
 Banks help the community by making it convenient for people to transact business. By depositing their money in a bank in a lump sum, they can pay it out in any amount by check as needed. They always have the exact change and get a receipt automatically. Besides, one can safely pay by check through the mails.
 Banks help the community by furnishing safe keeping vaults, where valuable papers such as wills, deeds, stock certificates, and policies are protected against fire, theft, and carelessness. They handle Escrows and in many instances estates, trusts and investments. Many of these services are indispensable to the community.
 Banks accept for deposit the savings of the community in small accounts, too small to be invested to advantage by the individual savers. Banks pay a liberal rate of interest on these small savings and with the many little accumulations are able to lend in larger amounts for the up-building of the community, for the construction of homes and factories and the financing of industry.
 Banks are an essential link in production. Money hoarded in a tin can does not produce, can do no one any good while it is there. The money must be put to work. The bank helps the community to produce by attracting all of the idle money from those who have it to loan and lending it out to those who can use it in production.
 The farmer could not produce without seed for his fields and stock for his ranges. He could not borrow money for these things from the public, a dollar at a time, but the bank can do this economically. It has the means of collecting small bits of capital and building up a reservoir of funds for the financing of all legitimate enterprises. It can carry the farmer through his growing and harvesting season. It also finances the manufacturing industry to a large extent.
 A shoe manufacturer must have raw materials and labor before he can turn out finished goods. The bank lends him money to pay the wholesaler for his leather and advances the money for his payroll. That money comes originally from the public. The bank merely draws it in from the masses and loans it out to industry. It collects interest from the borrowers and pays most of it over to the savers. It is one of the fine things about our economic life that one part of it helps the other. The people who work in the factory receive money for their services. They put part of it in the bank, thereby creating more capital which goes back into industry, buys more raw material and provides more work for themselves. It is an endless chain, with the bank as a connecting link. Take away this link and the whole system fails.
 In commerce and foreign trade, the bank also plays an important part. An exporter here cannot sell goods to an importer across the ocean without a guarantee of payment. To provide such guarantee of payment, the foreign importer establishes a letter of credit with the bank here, guaranteeing payment so that as soon as the goods are loaded on ship and covered by a bill of lading, the exporter may go to the bank and get his cash. Without such a system of guaranteeing payment for foreign shipments, we could not sell our cotton, our wheat, our other agricultural products, or our millions of dollars of manufactured goods, which keep the wheels of industry moving and provide work for everyone.
 The bank is not the whole thing in this smoothly working economic machine but is a very important cog and without it, the machine would not run.

BARUCH GAVE MILLIONS
 To Help Farmers in Cotton Holding Movement in 1914
 (Columbia State)
 A check for a fortune, and for the benefit of the Southern farmers! Such an incident is said to have happened in 1914 when Dr. Bernard M. Baruch, New York capitalist, ascertained steps taken by William Gibbs McAdoo, former secretary of the treasury, to raise $50,000,000 to help the farmers of the South in holding their cotton during times of poor prices.
 The story is told by Francis H. Weston, former district attorney for the Eastern district of South Carolina, and now a prominent attorney of Columbia. The capital city lawyer received the information in a conversation with Mr. McAdoo when the former member of Woodrow Wilson's cabinet paid a recent visit to the boyhood home of the late president.
 The appearance of Dr. Baruch in Columbia to make the commencement address before the graduating class of the University of South Carolina and to receive the honorary degree of LL.D., recalled the story to Mr. Weston's mind.
 "Mr. McAdoo was sitting in his office one afternoon in 1914," the Columbia attorney said. "He was puzzled as to how he would raise the balance of the money he had in mind for the Southern farmers. He had exhausted every resort to complete the $50,000,000 goal, and it seemed as if the plan would be a failure.
 "As he sat in his office an attendant opened the door, and presented a visiting card. He looked at the piece of paper, and saw the name of Bernard M. Baruch. At that time, Mr. McAdoo told me, he did not know the New York capitalist so very well. He had no idea as to what was the purpose of his visit.
 "Mr. Baruch was ushered into the inner room and took his seat. "I understand," he spoke to Mr. McAdoo, "that you are striving to help the Southern farmer. As you know, I am a Southern man myself, and I am interested in the South's agricultural pursuits. How much money do you need to help these farmers, Mr. Secretary?"
 "Three million dollars," Mr. McAdoo replied.
 "I will take it," returned Mr. Baruch.
 "Dr. Baruch reached in his pocket, produced a check and found a pen and ink. And then he wrote. He tendered the piece of paper to William G. McAdoo.
 "It's worth was $3,000,000."

THE SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

Railroad service that profits all of us

On the Southern Railway System last year we hauled seven million tons of farm products. We carried back to the farms a great volume of things that the farmer gets in exchange for his products.

This is a big part of the day's work of our 8,000 miles of lines, stretching across the South from the Potomac to the Mississippi.

Farm prosperity means prosperity for us. To give the best service, at rates which will enable our shippers to sell their products in the markets at a good profit, and which will enable us to make a fair profit, too, is a fundamental policy of the Southern Railway System.

Did you ever stop to think how much better service the Southern has given you in recent years since it was relieved from financial starvation? That is part of your share in our prosperity.

Southern Buys Coins
 Atlanta, Ga., June 16.—Announcement of the purchase of 10,000 Confederate Memorial coins by the Southern Railway System was recently made by Robert B. Pegram. The subscription was made through Mr. John King Otley, president of the Fourth National Bank.
 The Southern Railroad plans to distribute the Memorial coins through its stations in all the Southern states according to Mr. Pegram. It is taking the step as a means of operating in the patriotic endeavor being made by the Southern Bankers Committee. In many of the communities reached by the Southern Railroad residents would probably have difficulty in obtaining coins through other channels.
