FARMER SHOT IN BACK

Quarrel Over Bale of Cotton Ends With Gun Play

Laurens, Sept. 18.—Walter P. Jones, farmer of the old Master's lime kiln section of Waterloo township, is at the local hospital suffering from two pistol wounds, neither of which is considered serious, and Claude "Dude" Gambrell, a tenant on the Jones farm, is in hiding, having succeeded in eluding the officers so far, although strict search is being made in an effort to apprehend him. According to the officers, the two men had a dispute late yesterday afternoon over the division of the proceeds of a bale of cotton. They had agreed to refer the matter to a neighbor for arbitration and were on the way from Jones' house to the selected arbiter's home when, it is alleged, Gambrell, who was walking just behind Jones, apparently changed his mind over the course the settlement was taking, drew his pistol and shot Jones twice, one bullet inflicting a wound in the side and the other penetrating the hip and making its exit a few inches toward the front part of the thigh. Jones is resting comfortably today, it is stated.

Early Ship Lanterns

Valued by Collectors

One of the phases of the present craze for collecting anything connected with the old-time ships is that of earnestly seeking their lanterns or lamps, and very interesting and decorative, with the right surroundings, many of them are.

Numerous lamps are traded as ship's lanterns which never went to sea, says Capt. E. A. McCann in the Antiquarian, New York. If, however, it is a good-looking lamp and the owner is pleased with it, its history is perhaps not so very important, but if one wishes to be sure of the right nautical flavor, some precaution is necessary.

An intimate knowledge of ships and their ways is the best method of discriminating; but as a general index it may be stated that, to circumvent the uneasy motion of a vessel at sea, every ship lamp is built, either to swing from a handle or ring, or to securely fasten by the back, or, occasionally, by the base; within these limits there are many types.

The very earliest ship lanterns were metal cages erected in some prominent part of the ship, as a rule over the stern, into which some combustible, such as tow and resin, could be ignited to give warning to another ship and avert collision. This, in fact, is the only purpose, for exterior lights to this day, and they are carefully screened so as not to shine aboard, because any light on the deck is only a nuisance, so far as navigation is concerned, and even on the brilliantly lit modern steamship it may be noticed that all lights are screened from the bridge.

The frigates and ships-of-the-line which followed in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries had very similarly designed lanterns, only more elaborate in their ornamentation and careful in construction.

Any of these are, however, almost impossible to obtain, and are more suited to museums than to domestic use. Those vessels would also use cabin, gun-deck and other hand-lanterns, which again are extremely rare, though very desirable.

Italy's New Air Service

It is announced semi-officially that within the coming months Italy is to have its first regular civilian air traffic. Four lines are now decided upon—from Rome to Barcelona, Turin to Trieste, Trieste to Venice and Brindisi to Constantinople via Saloniki. It is not announced what subsidy will be supplied by the state, but it is taken for granted that a large subsidy will be necessary. Italy feels she has been backward in civil aviation. The newspaper Epoca says that when the fascist government came into power it found that the mechanical equipment of the aviation department consisted chiefly of typewriters. Now, it feels, Italy will be able to take her place on a basis of equality with Germany, France and England. Meanwhile Italy has consistently rejected offers of foreign companies to extend their air service to Italy. Such international lines will now be permitted, it is stated, but only if Italy retains the predominant part of the traffic.

In Buddy's Family

Buddy is a very little boy living in a city in northeastern Indiana. Although he is only three years old, his sayings are sometimes very eloquent. Buddy, like many other little boys, is sometimes naughty and he is sometimes punished. A few days ago he was visiting at the home of one of his little girl playmates. This girl was an only child and although she was sometimes naughty she was not punished very many times. She was, at the time of Buddy's visit, exceptionally bad and her mother wishing to quiet her said to Buddy, "Marjorie is naughty today, isn't she Buddy?" "Uh huh; if she was one of my mother's children she would get a whippin'," said Buddy knowingly.—Indianapolis News.

$50,000 Radio Story

Here is a prize radio story told to Eric H. Palmer on his visit in connection with his radio exploration tour of the country. According to a San Francisco dealer, he was asked to ship a receiver with full equipment, including a power amplifier and a set of extra tubes, to China. Asking the purchaser how much he expected to hear in China, the dealer was told:

"Oh, I don't expect to get much broadcasting out there, but I've got to do something evenings. I've been playing poker and mah-jongg and what not and losing $200 to $1,000 nightly and I just can't stop, but if I get the $50,000 I'll be able to get about $25,000 to $30,000 ahead in about a year, the way my luck's going and I'll be having more fun besides."

Almonds in Demand

An anticipated increase in the production of almonds in the United States has led to a study by the bureau of plant industry of the possible utilization of certain varieties of domestic almonds in the manufacture of food products. The domestic crop is at present largely consumed in the shell and not made into the quantities of nuts required for confectionery, almond bars and other pastries supplied principally from European sources. Population Estimate

The population of the United States is now nearly 114,000,000, according to estimates by the National Bureau of Economic Research. This, according to the bureau, indicates that our growth in this respect is slowing down.

MURDER IN CHESTERFIELD

Committed Last June and Recently Comes To Light

That a murder was committed in Mt. Croghan Township last June came to light last Saturday night, when the body of James Roberson, colored, about 20 years of age, was dug from a saw dust pile near Maysville by Sheriff Grant and his deputies. Several hours before the actual finding of the body, a colored man named Diggs was arrested in Wadesboro on instructions from Sheriff Grant, who charged him with the killing of Roberson.

Roberson was not a resident of this county, having come from North Carolina, and his disappearance had not attracted particular notice.

Information, however, reached the sheriff last Saturday that caused him to start an investigation.

The body was finally found in the large saw dust pile about daylight Sunday morning. Coroner Atkinson was immediately notified, who called together a coroner's jury and assisted by Dr. D. T. Teal, county physician, an inquest was held.

Two men, claiming to be eye witnesses to the tragedy, one white and one colored, testified before the jury. Their story was practically identical in all important points.

The first witness was H. B. Tucker, white, who told the jury that on the day in question in the second week of June, he with three colored men were working in an oat field. These men were Ernest Diggs, Sander Sellers and one named Orummety; that Jas. Roberson, a cousin of Diggs, was plowing in a cotton field nearby; that Diggs' little girl came to the field and told her father that Roberson was beating the mule. Diggs left the oat field and a few minutes later Roberson came down and sat on a log. He was followed by Diggs, who came up from the rear and struck Roberson several blows on the head with a "chair post." Roberson jumped up and ran about 25 yards and fell. The men in the field carried him to the shade of a tree, where he died in a few minutes. Mr. Tucker says that they picked up the body and carried it into the woods toward a saw dust pile, he following part of the way and returning.

Sanders Sellers' testimony corroborated that of Tucker and it seems he was able to guide the officers in their search for the body.

Dr. Teal, on examination of the body, testified that the boy's skull was fractured on the left side, ranging to the right temple and that the fracture was sufficient to cause his death.

The verdict of the jury was that James Roberson came to his death from blows on the head by a chair post in the hands of Diggs.

The body of the negro boy was in a fair state of preservation.

It is believed that fear of Diggs, had until recently sealed the mouths of the witnesses.—Chesterfield Advertiser.

Goes to Electric Chair

Chesterfield, Sept. 28.—Criminal court adjourned Saturday evening, after Judge Henry had sentenced Ernest Diggs, negro, to be electrocuted after a jury had convicted him of the murder of Henry Robison, 19 year old Charleston negro. Diggs, after the fatal blow was struck with the help of others concealed the body of the dead man in a saw dust pile. His confederates were sentenced to six months each for assisting in the concealment of the murder.

Has Flock of Pheasants

Lexington, Sept. 24.—Joe M. Caughman, Lexington game warden, has twenty grown pheasants, bred in his yard, and is planning to raise the beautiful game birds on a larger scale next season.

"I set two chicken hens with pheasant eggs purchased in the north," Mr. Caughman said yesterday. "From the first setting, in June, ten of the young grew to maturity. The thirty eggs set in July hatched out well, but I was able to raise only ten of the chicks. The twenty grown pheasants I now have are thriving."

"Had it not been for extremely hot weather, I would have done better with my last hatching, as I had learned what to feed them on and how much to feed them at a time. I got the eggs from Possum Hollow Game Farm, Springfield, O."

"I am going into it on a larger scale another season. They are the most interesting birds I ever saw and the greatest destroyers of insects. Pheasants sell for twelve dollars a pair. Mrs. H. N. Kammer and I are in together on this; she has some of the birds and I the rest."

A Non-Florida Booster.

Page another young man who has been to Florida, lured by the stories of great scads of filthy lucre to be had for the taking, who tried it out and who is now delighted to be back with the privilege of sticking his feet under father's table, and who also avows that one of the sweetest songs ever writ includes a line that "There's no place like home." This young man is Arthur (Mack) Crawford, son of Squire E. A. Crawford, of Guthrieville, and former Yorkville High student, who got back last week, broke and more experienced, but most happy to be back in God's country, young Mr. Crawford deposes and says:

"I was led to believe that there were plenty of jobs in Florida and that a young chap who wasn't afraid of work could get along much better there than he could in South Carolina. So I went to Tampa. I loafed around a week before I got anything to do at all. Then I got a place working at a filling station, a Standard Oil concern in Tampa. The pay was $21 a week. I decided that since I was working regularly it was necessary to eat regularly. I looked about for an abode and was accepted as a boarder at $18 a week. At the boarding house like all Florida boarding houses you pay in advance. They have no stars. Well, I worked a while, but nothing was said about any advance in wages. I got an occasional tip from some tourist who came to the station to be supplied with oil and gas—sometimes as much as seventy-five cents a day in tips; but more often no tip at all, of course. One day the landlady said she would have to increase the price of eats, because everything was so high and I couldn't figure how the dickens I could accommodate her with more pay. I hadn't spent quite all the money I took to Florida with me, so I figured the best thing I could do was to get out of Florida before I had to walk out. So I started, got as far as Columbia where I met friends with money and then came on to home where I am glad to be, and I think I know all I want to know about Florida, thank you, sir."—Yorkville Enquirer.

A trick worth knowing

"WAIT A MINUTE. You don't need to open up that vacuum tank to fill it after you have run completely out of gas. I'll show you an easier way. Just step on the starter and spin the motor for half a minute or so while I plug this vent with my finger. Your engine will suck the air out of the vacuum tank and fill it with gas for you."

Just another handy trick the Fleet Boss has learned from experience. No wonder he is full of such stunts. He has been working with automobile engines for twenty years. Maybe that is why he always recommends "Standard" Motor Oils for they have two generations of experience in refining behind them. Experience counts in refining as in everything else.
