

Dead Man at Throttle
Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 15.—With a dead man's hand gripping the throttle the Western Express, New York Central sleeping train bound to Chicago, sped westward for a distance of nearly fifteen miles early today. Charles J. Foreman, fireman, of Albany, discovered his engineer, William Van Bergen, also of Albany, dead in the cab of the engine with his head crushed as the fiercer came through Minna yard, just east of Syracuse. Van Bergen is believed to have been struck by a girder of the Nanaastota canal bridge.

In Vermont there are 116 towns which have no resident physicians.

Judge Finley's Position
Judge Finley, who presided over the trial of W. B. Cole, charged with the killing of Bill Ormond at Rockingham, N. C., said that the hearing held on the sanity of Cole, following his acquittal, was called so that no loophole might be left open. Continuing, Judge Finley said: "I don't hesitate to repeat that I think a different verdict should have been returned. The jurors let their hearts rule them instead of their heads. I will say, however, that under the same circumstances that seven or eight juries out of ten would have returned the same verdict. They permit their feelings to warp their reason. They returned this verdict, and it cannot be changed. They were honest, prayerful, conscientious men. When he has shown his sanity by all these affidavits I cannot commit the defendant."

Captain Lewis, of the Lewis and Clark Expedition, noted that evaporation was more rapid on the western plains by observing how rapidly his ink dried on the paper.

MAN SUPPOSED DEAD
Returns To America To Face a Murder Charge

New York, Oct. 15.—Arrested as he arrived on a liner from Germany William H. Turner, 39, a former mine foreman at McCarr, Pike County, Kentucky, was formerly charged with being a fugitive from justice on a charge of murder. He is wanted in connection with a mine bomb explosion which killed two men, one of whom was identified as Turner by a relative, who collected $85,000 insurance.

Turner admitted fleeing to Europe after the explosion so that he would be thought dead.

Turner told police he returned to this country because he was tired of "trying to create a new life and new personality" and had not the detectives arrested him at the pier he would have surrendered himself.

The explosion on which the murder charge is based, occurred in January, 1924. Two miners were killed, both badly burned and mutilated. One later was identified as Turner by Turner's relatives. In the meantime Turner had disappeared.

Today Turner admitted that "certain of his relatives" induced him to feign death. He says he understands his sisters obtained $60,000 from one policy and his wife $25,000 from another policy.

Turner arrived in the United States from Germany, where he fled shortly after the explosion, virtually penniless. He came back in second rate quarters and carried all his belongings in a paper suit case.

A representative of the insurance company which paid the $85,000 claim was present when officers identified Turner.

The owners of 300,000 dogs in the city of Berlin threatened to parade them through the streets of Berlin as a protest against the mayor's proposed increase in the yearly dog tax from $7.50 to $10.00.
