

Christmas For The Mail Man

For the first time in many years the mail carriers will enjoy Christmas this year. Postmaster General New has decided to eliminate the Christmas day deliveries this year and the carriers will be able to enjoy the holiday with the rest of the world.

Deliveries of mail during the days preceding Christmas have been an unusual burden on the entire postoffice forces, and particularly on the carriers who have had to carry extraordinarily heavy burdens frequently through unusually disagreeable weather. The Christmas day deliveries themselves have frequently marked the climax of a particularly onerous task, and the mail carrier who has had to make his rounds on Christmas has had good cause to look forward to the holiday with little pleasure.

The decision to eliminate the Christmas day deliveries will no doubt receive the approval of most people. True, some of those who wait until the last minute to mail their Christmas packages and cards, may find them undelivered until the day following, but there is every reason why the citizen who has any real spark of the Christmas spirit in him should enter heartily into the spirit of the movement to give the carriers a holiday, and post his Christmas mail so that it can be delivered the day before. Practically all of us can advance our Christmas mailing program by one day without inconvenience or extra cost.—Rock Hill Record.

He Started Very Small

The modest dwelling where the H. J. Heinz Company, manufacturers of food products, began business in 1869 now occupies a place of honor in the center of the company's large group of office and factory buildings in Pittsburgh. The structure was removed from its original site in Sharpsburg, Pa., placed on barges and floated three and one-half miles down the Allegheny river to its new location. When the small building was placed on its new foundations, the company's employes assembled and applauded the sentiment which prompted Howard Heinz, son of the founder, to give the company's first home its prominent position.

When H. J. Heinz began business he leased a residence, which he converted into the first Heinz factory and three employes prepared the horse-radish he raised in a small garden. Today the company has more than 10,000 names on its payroll, and approximately 150,000 persons are engaged in growing crops for it. The company's factories and warehouses have a floor space of 127 acres.

Germany has more than four million goats, goat cheese being a favorite dish there.

No Convict Camps in This State.

Columbia, Nov. 6.—"Dutch" Anderson, notorious bandit, and gang leader recently slain with his own gun by a Michigan policeman, could never have worked as a convict in a South Carolina turpentine camp, according to a statement issued today by Governor McLeod. Neither could Anderson, if he came to this country at the age of twenty, as he attorney stated, have worked as a leased convict at all.

Convicts in this state have never been leased to turpentine camps, the governor said, and they have not been leased as farm and railroad laborers for over twenty years. At one time convicts were leased to phosphate mine owners, but this was abolished by law in 1889. Anderson's age has been given as 38, which would have made it impossible for him to have been leased as a convict if he was twenty when he came from Denmark, as was stated by his attorney.
