WAS MOSELEY SLAIN?

Strong Insinuations Made in Statements By Relatives
 Convinced that Charles R. Moseley, prominent Spartanburg insurance man whose body was found under a trestle near Columbia last March, was murdered, members of his family and local friends have issued a statement to The Spartanburg Herald with reference to the case.
 Mr. Moseley, son-in-law of Prof. A. DuPre of Wofford College, at his life while en route from Charleston, where he had been transacting business matters, to his home in this city, The Herald says, his body was discovered a little more than a mile from Columbia. The first theory evolved was that he had fallen from the trestle while walking along the Southern Railway tracks. This theory has never been accepted by members of his family or by his friends here, and determined efforts will be made to ascertain the real circumstances connected with Mr. Moseley's death. The statement follows:
 "The family and friends of Charles Moseley, of Spartanburg, are convinced that he met his death by foul play, and that he did not lose his life by a fall from a trestle, as was at first reported in the papers.
 Mr. Moseley left Charleston in a Hudson coach on the afternoon of March 1, to return home. He checked out from the Francis Marion Hotel at 5 o'clock, having talked with several parties just before leaving. Early the following morning this car was found on a spur track of the Southern Railway, about thirty feet from the highway leading into the town of Cayce, and a half mile from Columbia. The car showed very evident signs of a struggle. The upholstery in the top of the car was ripped open in two places. The right door was torn completely off, and lying on the ground beside the car. There was no scar of any kind on the door to indicate that it had struck anything. There was mud in the car and blood on the gear shift. The glass in both doors was shattered, but the glass in the wind shield was intact. Some of the upholstery was torn from the backs of the seats.

 "Mr. Moseley's body was found a half mile away from the car lying beneath a Southern Railway trestle. There was a three inch open cut in the back of his head, and a circular depressed fracture of the skull just below it. There were bruises on the forehead, nose, mouth and chin, and a circular bruise on the right wrist and left hand. Mr. Moseley's shirt and coat sleeves were saturated with blood from near the shoulder seam to the cuff, yet the skin of the arm underneath was nowhere broken, showing that the blood soaked in from outside. A peculiar and telling piece of evidence is the fact that the left sleeve of the raincoat, which was also on the body, had practically no blood on it, showing that it had been put on after the blood had soaked into the other two sleeves. Furthermore, the raincoat pocket had a three and a half inch tear in it, and the pants belt strap was torn half in two. This strap had not ripped loose from either side, but was broken in two. The clothes under the raincoat were very muddy, both back and front.
 "The condition of his clothes, and the fact that there was so little blood at the spot where his body was found, no bones were broken and no bruises on his body, a fatal blow on the back of his head yet bruises all over his face, were conclusive proof that he did not fall from the trestle but was killed and placed there. In the face of all this evidence, the Governor's detective stated that they believed it was a clear case of accident.
 "There was a filling station with a light in front which burned all night within two hundred feet of where the car was found. Had Mr. Moseley had car trouble he would have gone to this filling station for help, and would never have attempted to walk one and a half miles, through the town of Cayce, to Columbia, across two trestles on a dark night. It was bitterly cold, with a strong wind blowing. Mr. Moseley's suit case was found in the car, and his brief case containing papers was found leaning against a section house near the railroad about one hundred feet away.

"The coroner's jury has never rendered a verdict. The physician called to the scene stated that he could not agree to a verdict of accidental death because he did not believe there was enough blood at the spot for a man to have been killed there.

"Upon request of the coroner and members of the family, governor Richards assigned a State detective on the case. But the following day, the same detective, W. W. Rogers, was sent to Cheraw to break up a still, and was detained there several days. Later he was sent to Camden to arrest Sunday golfers. All this time clues to the crime were getting cold.

"Upon request of the family for further investigation, Governor Richards assigned State Detective Carlos Rector on the case. Born detectives reported that they could find no clues whatever.

"It was rumored in Columbia that a bootlegger was coming through from Charleston in a Hudson coach the same night of March the first, in South Carolina, State detectives do double duty. They serve both as detectives and as prohibition officers.

Bootlegger King Slays Wife

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 6.—George Remus, one time "king of bootleggers," today shot his wife, Imogene, to death as she leaped from a taxi cab after seeing Remus' car swing out from a parking place into traffic behind her. Mrs. Remus was on her way at the time to attend a hearing on a divorce suit she filed against her husband before he was released from the Atlanta penitentiary in 1925. Remus was being held in jail tonight without bond on a first degree murder charge. The shooting occurred as Mrs. Remus drove through Eden park here. She died after being removed to a hospital. The divorce suit was to have received a definite hearing today after it had been delayed by repeated continuances. To forestall an insanity plea, County Prosecutor C. P. Taft late today ordered Dr. W. C. Kendig, Hamilton county court alienist, to interview Remus and form his own conclusions regarding whether Remus was insane at the time of the killing. An automobile with Remus in it swung out from the side of Victory parkway early this morning to follow a taxi in which Mrs. Remus and her adopted daughter, Ruth, 19, were riding to court.

Look Before You Fire

The owner of a department store walking through the packing room, noticed a boy idly leaning against a case and whistling. The owner glared at him.
 "How much do you get a week?" he demanded.
 "Five dollars, sir," replied the boy.
 "Then here's a week's pay. Now get out!"
 The boy put the money in his pocket and departed.
 "When did you hire that loafer?" the owner demanded of the department head a little later.
 "Never," was the answer, "he was delivering a note for another firm."—Everybody's Magazine.

Parson Gets Two Years

Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 7.—Recommending mercy, a jury in Mecklenburg superior court today found the Rev. Willis T. Jordan of Columbus, Ga., guilty of bigamy, and Judge Jas. L. Webb sentenced the aged divine to from two to three years in the State penitentiary at Raleigh.

The trial, begun here Wednesday, swept forward to a rather lagging finish after the introduction of voluminous testimony, which for three days pivoted around an alleged series of matrimonial escapades culminating in the preacher's marriage here to Mrs. Emma Langridge-Jordan of Washington, D. C., August 19, the specific incident which led to his arrest, indictment and trial.

Sent back to jail with bond fixed at $1,000, a ray of hope was seen tonight when Tom P. Jimson of defense counsel said he believed he would be able to post bond Monday from voluntary subscription of citizens who have offered to contribute sums ranging from $25 to $100 to effect the minister's release from jail.
