King and Harrell to Pay Extreme Penalty

Mortimer N. King and Frank Harrell, young cotton mill workers, have been sentenced to die in the electric chair at Columbia November 21st for the murder of Maj. Samuel H. McLeary, July 2nd, near Cheraw. They had previously admitted their guilt in a signed confession. Their trial put at 55.4 as compared with 56 per

In Memoriam.

In sad but loving remembrance of my dear sister, Narcisa, Catherine Hartzog, who departed this life Sept. 11, 1921. Just three years ago the Reaper took her away, my dear and devoted sister; for me in Paradise she is waiting.

Oh, dear sister Narcisa how we miss you.

Miss you more than tongue can tell. But in Heaven we hope to meet you. When no farewell tears are shed. As time goes by we miss her more.

Her loving voice, her smiling face. No one can fill her vacant place.

A few hours she bore in pain. To wait for cure that never came. But God who knoweth all things best.

Did still her pain and give her rest. Forget her? No, we never will.

We loved her then, we love her still. Her memory is as fresh today.

As in the hour she passed away. In the far and distant graveyard.

Where the trees their branches wave. Lies our dear, beloved sister.

In the cold and silent grave. Sleep on dearest sister Narcissa, rest thy head on Jesus' breast.

And when life with us is over. We shall meet in the land of rest.

Gone from sorrow, grief and anguish. Gone from earth; no more to languish.

Gone, thy loving soul set free. But sister how hard to part from thee.

The Golden Gates were open. A gentle voice said come.

And with farewell unspoken. She calmly entered home.

But, oh, a brighter home than ours. In Heaven is now her own.

Her sister Vernon Hartzog.

DISTRICT CANNING CONTEST AT TRI-STATE EXPOSITION

—Foltz, Savannah.

Not only is the work carried on by the fair at Savannah symbolic of what is being done all over Georgia towards improving agriculture and developing rural life to a higher standard, but the educational features are set along the line to teach the young people of rural communities the most modern methods of home making and domestic economics.

The scene above shows young ladies of different counties competing last year in a canning contest at Savannah. The winner was sent to Chicago to enter the national meet for higher honors. The district meet was conducted under supervision of demonstration agents and it proved highly successful, according to the work performed.

A similar contest among girls of Savannah's territory will be held again this year during fair week, October 27 to November 1, in the Johnson Building. Mrs. Kate L. Smith, district agent, was encouraged very much by the results obtained at the last fair and the indications are that the same enthusiasm will be exhibited in competing for the prizes this year. This department of the Tri-State Exposition is directed entirely by the district and county agents and the products have to meet the same high standard as set by demonstration clubs throughout Georgia.

THE HAPPINESS OF MISS NORA

By JANE GORDON

(© 1924, Western Newspaper Union.)

MISS JESSIE was loved by all who knew her in the town of Lynden. So, when Judge Oliver died and left to his daughter his fortune, the town, as one person, rejoiced.

Oliver, her only sister's boy, was also left to her care. She intended that Oliver should have all those advantages which his parents might have bestowed, had they survived. But when Oliver should go away to school, and later on to the furtherance of some chosen career, Miss Jessie knew that she would be alone. The big house ought to be home to more than just one solitary woman, she decided.

Then Miss Jessie went over to the Lynden orphanage to adopt a baby. The matron welcomed her gratefully. "I have decided to adopt a little girl," Jessie said, "which would you recommend, Mrs. Gray?"

The matron was hesitant. "Our home is so full of heart stories," she said, "that we do not allow our sympathies to hold sway. But there are two cases, two dear baby girls, whom I would love to see happily placed. Here is Milly Stephens' baby girl, fair and dainty as Milly herself. She ran away with a traveling violinist, you remember, and brought herself, through such an unfortunate marriage, the disapproval of her family. Then, here is wee Nora—that name is all we know of her parentage. A sweet young Irish girl came one night to the town hospital; she had been grievously disappointed in not finding her young husband, as she said, at the pier to meet her when the steamer arrived from abroad. Seeking him, she came on here, and died with wee Nora's coming.

"Nora" was worked on her handkerchiefs, so we called the baby 'Nora' when it was brought to us. Black hair you see, Miss Jessie, and eyes as dark blue as English violets."

Miss Jessie next morning went to the orphanage and adopted both Milly Stephens' baby and the wee Nora. "I've always wanted a namesake," said Jessie. So the fair haired baby girl was called Jessica. The children grew and were Miss Jessie's joy. When she fancied an aptitude for music in little Jessica, Miss Jessie hastened to give the child an education in music. Mrs. Nora was just a happy home body, with no special talent perceptible. Nora's lilted song was heard in the gloomy hall; Nora's silvery laughter echoed through the garden. Easily she gave place to Jessica's own realized superiority.

Oliver Cameron had made several visits to his aunt's home, and had naturally, it seemed, selected Jessica as his companion. With the gay little Nora he laughed and jested. With Jessica he drove or played games at the country club.

Nora might have had her admirers, too—"like picking cherries off a tree"—she laughed to Miss Jessie, "but when one does not care for cherries—"

"Whom then, do you care for, little one?" Miss Jessie asked whimsically.

Nora's rosy cheeks deepened their color. "For you, dear one," she answered gravely.

When Oliver came again to the great house Jessica was away at the conservatory of music. Nora was, therefore, honored with those invitations which Jessica might have had. And when again he came home—Oliver was practicing his profession now in an adjoining city—it was Nora who happened to be absent.

"I sent the child away for a rest," Miss Jessie said. "I have been ill, Oliver, and Nora has been too devoted a nurse."

Jessica played her best music for Oliver; she was lovely of face, pleasing in manner.

The halls of Oliver's house were very lonesome, silent. No light, soft laughter, no dancing blue eyes of Nora to twinkle out of the gloom like stars.

"I am going away tomorrow," Jessica told him. "Such a wonderful opportunity. Gwendolyn Vars is taking a studio in New York."

"But," Oliver said, puzzled, "Aunt Jessie is in poor health; the doctor says her condition is really critical."

Jessica's glance was reproachful. "Oliver!" she exclaimed, "you mean you think I ought to stay here now, and miss this great opportunity, while Aunt Jessie is cared for, competently?"

The train which carried Jessica away brought an indignant young Nora back. She met Oliver as he was bidding Jessica good-by.

"You should have wired me about Aunt Jessie's condition," she accused. "I came on last night as soon as I heard that she was not so well. I shall not leave her again."

Oliver could not claim a moment of Nora's society as she remained faithful and cheering in the sick room. He was a very desolate and awakened Oliver. Strange, he told himself that he had not realized this longing for Nora's quick smile, for the dear comfort of her, the state of his own heart.

He found Nora resting one evening in the moonlit garden. Her blue eyes were filled with tears. "Tears of gratitude," she told him firmly, "because our Aunt Jessie is soon to be well."

"I had hoped," said Oliver, "that they might be tears of loneliness, perhaps—like mine, Nora, for the love of you."

And later Nora looked up from her lover's shoulder. "It's like the happiness that would have been," she said softly, "had my poor little mother met her true husband when she crossed the ocean to his love."

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE consists of an Ointment which quickly Relieves by local application, and the Internal Medicine, a Tonic, which assists in improving the General Health.
