been a marvelous bargain. The land alone was worth more than the price asked for the house and lot together, with carpets and fixtures thrown in.

The former owner had had greater ousiness interests in another part of the world, and having found himself unable to live in two places at once. had wisely concluded to convert the superfluous house into cash. Mr. Danvers had bought it for a ridiculously small sum, and felt that he ought to be congratulated.

But although good Mr. Danvers was jubilant over the purchase, Mrs. Danvers, on her first inspection of the new house, sat down upon the thrown-in carpet and burst into tears. The moment she beheld the parlor wall paper she forgot all else and gave herself up to grief. It was really enough to make one oblivious of other things. Mrs. Dan woman, who loved pink-and-white rooms. The late occupant of the house had been a big red-and-yellow man, who liked redand-yellow rooms, and his taste in wall paper was certainly deplorable. There was only one thing in the house worse than the paper, and that was the carpet. "What, don't you like the paper! exclaimed astonished Mr. Danvers, who was not artistic. "Why, that's splendid paper! It must have cost $3 a roll. Pattern's a trifle large, per-

"There's great stuff in that carpet, too," said Mr. Danvers, eyeing it ap provingly, "It'll wear like iron, in spite of the children running over it. Those big magenta roses stand out well, don't they?"

Mrs. Danvers shuddered. The carpet was a calamity.

Reasonable as the price had been t had taken all Mr. Danvers could spare to make the purchase, so there was no money to be foolishly wasted in replacing the perfectly good paper could with her pictures and furniture, wisely made the best of it, but all her day dreams for the next ten years centered about the repapering of the lisfigured parlor.

"Wouldn't it be glorious," Margery would say, "if our chimney should get struck by lightning as the Browns' did? The paper was torn off the dining room wall, and soot from the chimney ruined the rugs. The Browns seem to have all the good luck." The Browns selfishly retained their monopoly of the lightning, and the hated paper continued to bear a charmed life. No warning voice was ever raised when the little Danverses approached the parlor wall with sticky fingers; and although Mrs. Danvers and Margery fairly courted disaster, none ever came. At last, when Margery was 17, both paper and carpet showed unmistakable signs of wear. "Do anything you like about it. It's your house," said Mr. Danvers, generously, when Mrs. Danvers pointed out the defects. "Yes, get anything you like; all paper looks aliketo me. that lurked in every corner. At last, however, it was all finishel, to the complete satisfaction of Mrs Danvers and Margery, who ceased to covet the Browns' share of devastating lightning. Indeed, the renovated parlor became the object of Mrs. Danvers' tenderest souchule, and the little Lanverses began to see imaginary "Keep off the grass" signs on every side. And to some hungry one.-Ram's Horn. then, when it was no longer wanted, the disaster came. Just a week after the departure of the last workman Mrs. Danvers went with her husband to a concert, leaving the house and sleeping children in Margery's care.

Margery spent the first hour in the kitchen, making peanut taffy. When at last she returned to the front of the house she was greeted by an odd pungent order.

Margery, seizing the two heavy pails of water which Mrs. Danvers kept the firemen in they'll ruin the new floors with their muddy boots, and they'll flood the whole house with water. Oh, I can't let them spoil that

So, never thinking that her mother would rather lose a thousand beautiful parlors than one little loving daughter. Margery rushed into the dense smoke and burled the contents of her pails straight at the scarlet fronted by the total absence of three

The smoke stung her throat and almost blinded her, but she groped her way from the room, felt her way across the hall, ran down the stairs, and refilled her pails at the kitchen The bath room was nearer, but Margery remembered that the faucets there were small, and knew she would save time by going to the kitchen.

She drank a little cold water, filled her lungs with fresh air at the open door and tucked up her skirts. Then up she went with her heavy burden, not spilling a drop on the precious floors. After the third journey Margery noticed that the scarlet spot had a minished in size, although the smoke was quite as dense.

"I must be careful not to put on a scrap more water than I need," said this model fireman, as she toiled up ward with her heavy pails. "I mustn't spoil the dining room ceiling. I believe the fire is in the pillows and bedding stored in that closet. I'll open the window and throw them all out, if

SOME ECCENTRIC RAILWAYS.

"Oh, I must-I must do it!" cried Remarkable Engineering Feats on Roads in Russia and Peru.

As the iron track is bound to force ready in her little conversatory for the Its way into most corners of the world purpose of watering her plants. "The it is not surprising that some lines of fire is all in that one room. If I let railways exist which are striking evidence of a singularly bold conception carried out in the face of obstacles which seemed almost insurmountable. Sometimes the route of a future line lovely pale-green paper and those love lies across a desert; then the great law of the "compensation of nature" seems to make itself felt for to balance the saving of time and money due to the fact that long tunnels will not have to be cut through the hills or mountains the engineers are conessential elements of construction. namely, wood, iron and water, which have to be transported along a newly laid line as it stretches its slow length across the desert. Itassia's Trans-Caspian railway, now known as the Central Asian Railway, was built under these conditions. of logs of timber were needed, and the region traversed cannot boast of a single tree for more than 700 miles. This timber was required for building the long bridge, two miles in length, over the river Amu-Darva.

This bridge was always the weak point in that highly important railway, and it has been replaced recently by a stone bridge. Between Merv and Charjui the line had to be carried over shifting sands sixty-four feet deep. . When the work is being carried out in such regions the trains become a little town on wheels. They are composed of two-story wagons, which contain sleeping accommodation, butchers' stalls, canteens and forges. As the Trans-Siberian railway grew in length it was resolved by the authorities that the workmen should have their own "church car." A wagon was fitted up accordingly as a church, with a little peal of bells in the alcove above the

The romance of mountain railways by no means ends with their construction, and traveling upon railways at a very high altitude is not a thing to be desired. The Peruvian line running from Callao to Oroya has a twofold claim to distinction; it is built at probably the greatest altitude of any existing railway, namely, 15,906 feet above sea level, and it affords travelers certainly the most unpleasant "experience de voyage" that can be imagined. As the result of traveling at such an altitude, the passengers begin by feeling the great oppression, accompanied by pains in the head and limbs; these are quickly followed by bleeding from the nose and mouth, and then by momentary blindness. It is gratifying to know that there is a certain variety in the effects produced upon passengers at this point. Thus, while some persons are seized with giddiness, others entertain strange hallucinations, and others faint away; the last class become so weak that any undue exertion on their part often proves fatal. But this is not all that one has to undergo on the Callao and Oroya line. In due course the skin becomes irritable and sores break out, while the lips swell and then crack.

The Going-to-Theatre Face.

Will some one please explain the "going-to-theatre face" of the average New Yorker? The question is suggested by a long experience in lobbies while the auditors are passing in the houses for the evening performance. The writer stood for nearly an hour engaged in the seemingly hopeless task of discovering "the cheerful theater-goer." But in they poured, men and women, each and every one with firm set jaw, gloomy brow and the look of despair. Perhaps it is because the long distances traveled on crowded cars and the thought of an equally uncomfortable home-going makes a night at the theatre seem just a bit like work to the residents of this narrow isle.-New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Return of the fofa. The sofa of our grand-parents is returning-high-backed, long and broad. Nowadays it is litted out with such springs as our grandparents knew not, and it is upholstered in soft and luxurious ways that would make it unrecognizable to them. But it is the old sofa, not a divan. It is much more expensive than the narrow cot which is the foundation of all Turkish and Oriental resting places as they are known in the United States. Moreover, how it can be used for a bed by night is not yet clear. This useful convertability is one of the chief recommendations of the divan. Consequently the sofa can never quite take the place of that in "light" housekeeping. But for these fortunate beings who have more than one room and who are not driven to subterfuges it is charming.

The Care of Toilet Articles. In these days of luxurious toilet fittings one is often surprised to see the carelessness with which they are treated. Brushes, in particular, suffer from lack of care, although so many are needed for various purposes.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: - Eighteen months ago I was a pretty sick woman. I had felt for some months that I gradually grew weaker, but finally I had such severe pains I could hardly stand it. I had taken cold during menstruation and this developed into congestion of the ovaries and inflammation, and I could not bear to walk or stand on my feet. The doctor recommended an operation which I would not hear of. One of my friends advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I gave it a trial. Can you imagine my feeling when within two months I felt considerably better, my general health was improved, and my pains had entirely disappeared.
