Senator Tillman says that South Carolina people are going to have prohibition because they are disgusted with the county dispensary law. The Senator is of the opinion that the stealing has been too much scattered under the new law.

Few people look at it that way, but the man who plows into the public road does more for the discomfort of the traveling public than he could possibly do any other way. Some of the best roads in the county are being practically ruined by plowmen, and it high time the practice was stopped. No favors should be shown any man guilty, no matter who he is, but the full penalty of the law should be imposed. It will never be stopped until the authorities come down with a heavy hand on all violators of the law.

A prominent farmer of this county asked us a few days ago to say something about the practice of plowing into the public roads. We asked him why he did not prosecute those who were guilty of this sort of thing, and he very rightly said that he hated to prosecute his neighbors. His position is correct, and we cheerfully bring the matter to the attention of our officials. CARLISLE FITTING SCHOOL.

Military Feature Added and Standard of the School Raised.

Editor Bamberg Herald:-I should ike sufficient space in the Herald to call the attention of your readers to some changes that have been made in the Carlisle Fitting School. While these changes are anounced in our latest catalog, there are a great many friends and patrons of the gold mesh purse. school whom we do not know personally, therefore cannot reach them by that means. So we seek to inform them through your valued paper.

The most radical departure from the former way in which the school has been managed, is the institution of the military feature. While presumably militarism does not appeal to a great many educators, yet all agree that many benefits are to be derived from military disipline. I hope shall be pardoned for quoting from our announcement which says: "It tends to muscular development and physical well-being by an enforced regularity in food, sleep and exercise It creates habits of promptitude, order, disipline and subordination. It promotes self-reliance and personal character by removing all social distinctions, and puts each student upon his own personal responsibility." then, we desire to assure our friends that the important change has been made, not to encourage militarism but simply as a means to an end-its

Another, and I think, the most helpful change to the patrons of the school, is the raising of the standard high schools of this section. One could not be blamed for patronizing the and which will be faithfully carried out, is commensurate with the demands of the times. We commend this

I might mention that as a matter of course, the dress for students will. will not be required to conform to this requirement so far as their every In commenting on our editorial as day dress is concerned. Girls like variety, and should have some opportunity for individual taste, while

I think we hardly realize some times what an important factor the Carlisle Fitting School is in the good reputation and even material prosperity of the town. Thousands of Carolinians, and many even beyond the borders of the State, talk familiarly of Bamberg, chiefly because of this institution. And it is not a small

Stop the Clock.

Two men were talking together in of them said, to show the enormous income of the man:

'Say, do you know whenever that clock in the room) goes tick, Rockefeller makes a thousand dollars?"

"Is that so?" "That's a fact."

"Then stop the clock."

The Point of View. "You can't get in here on a halfticket," exclaimed the doorkeeper at the circus.

"I thought I could," apologized a small-town citizen. "I have a bad eye, and I only expected to see half of the show.

'Then you'll have to get two tickets," said the doorkeeper. "If you only have one eye it'll take you twice as long to see the show."

A Lesson In

Constrighted, 1907, by P. C. Eastment.

Of course I like you to be sympathetic and generous-it's all a part of you. But I do wish you could be made to see the evils of such recklessly indiscriminate giving," said Howard.

They had just passed a one armed beggar, who had stepped in front of them with his monotonous whine for coins. Howard, after a sharp glance, had said curtly, "Stand aside!" had brushed away the extended hand and taken Beth's arm to guide her past. But with an exclamation of pity the girl had turned back to empty into the man's hand all the change in her little

"My giving is not indiscriminate. That man was maimed-he had only one arm-and the other one was trembling from palsy or weakness," anwered Beth, with some heat.

"My dear, that man's hand is trembling from drink, and as likely as not he has another arm under his coat. You don't realize what frauds these professional beggars are. Can't you see, Beth, that it's the principle of the thing that is wrong? The money you give so carelessly might better be used for people who really need it, and you seldom find that kind begging on the streets.'

They had reached Beth's home by this time, and, as usual, Howard went in with her for the afternoon tea Beth always made by the living room fire. When they entered the house the subject was not continued, though they both felt dissatisfied. Beth busied herself at the little table silently. There was an angry light in her eyes. She resented Howard's interference in such things, and she told herself that Howard was not quite what she had thought him.

Howard was about to go when the front door opened and shut, and Beth's Uncle John, with whom she had lived since the death of her parents, came in and went up the stairs to his room. Howard settled back into his chair, for he liked Beth's uncle, who was a jolly old man. But Beth looked unaccountably nervous, rattled the tea things and rang the bell for more hot water. She jumped guiltily as an irate voice from upstairs called, "Beth!"

"Yes, uncle, what is it?" she called back, going to the foot of the stairs.

"What have you done with my gray smoking jacket and those black slippers? I can't find them anywhere, and I left them right here on the floor. I wish Mary wouldn't have cleaning up streaks."

Beth darted a queer glance at Howard and then ran up the stairs. She spoke so softly that Howard could not hear what she said, but her uncle's voice was far reaching, and the young man listened shamelessly, for he guessed what was the matter. Now he grinned silently to himself as the one sided conversation went on.

"What the deuce!" he was fairly roaring. "That jacket is the only one I've ever had that's any good. And I look like a peeled onion in that purple thing, and you know it." There was a silence. Then the voice in somewhat softer tones went on.

"Well, if you can't rest unless you're giving things away and my things are attractive to you, you just make it a point to ask me what I can get along without. Well, then, give me my old slippers." Another silence.

"Do you mean to tell me that you gave away that pair of slippers that I've been breaking in for a year and just got adjusted to my feet? By George! Who got those?" Silence.

"Well, he didn't need them as bad as I do. He couldn't feed my smoking jacket to a starving baby, and those slippers will fit his sick wife to perfection, I suppose. What else did you give him?" Another silence—then a snort.

"There! That's enough! Don't tell me too much at once! I'm liable to get mad!" When he heard Beth's heel taps on the stairs Howard strolled to the farthest window and turned innocently around to speak to Beth as if nothing had happened. Her face was red and her eyes wet.

"Uncle's cross tonight," she said airily. "I-he acts as if he had lost something." She did not speak again, but began to make fresh tea, and in a minute or two her uncle appeared in the doorway. He had on a purple silk jacket and a purple cap stuck jauntily over one ear on his bald head.

"Look like the shah's butler, don't I?" the elder man said as he carefully lowered his heavy figure into his easy chair and stuck his feet out before him. "Your turn will come. You'll live to see your best shoes tripping down the street, and you'll meet your hats and coats and trousers strolling about the city until you won't know whether you're dreaming or whether there are two of you."

Harvey was a little uneasy. He looked at Beth and smiled, and she looked back coldly, thinking that she read "I told you so" in his face. She disappeared when she had given her uncle his tea and did not come down again until Howard was gone and dinner was ready. The next morning Beth spent in overhauling all her clothes, piling into great heap on the floor everything that she did not like or was a little soiled. And on the top she put the spring suit that Howard liked so much. It was a little dirty around the edge of the skirt, though that was not why she

to herself as she gathered the gar ments into her arms and carried then to the basement, where she bestowed them all upon the new laundress. That woman left in a hurry before her day's work was done, fearing that Beth would change her mind.

Two days later Howard started ug to Beth's 'a his car to take her out for a long drive, as arranged with her over the phone. What was his amaze ment, therefore, as he drove slowly through the downtown streets to se Beth in her gray walking suit and toque just disappearing around a corner. He called to her, but she did not hear, and the young fellow stopped the machine. With set chin and tightened lips and hurt eyes he drove slowly on up the hill and past the house, wher Beth in a blue dress waited in the hall

When she saw Howard whiz by never once glancing at the house, she was first indignant and then angry And after an hour of deliberation, dur ing which her wrath increased, she rang for a messenger and put into his hands a note and a little sealed packet which contained her ring.

She came down to dinner pale and wan. Her uncle looked at her sharply. seeing traces of tears, and decided that he would act.

"I'm sorry to speak about this again," he said, clearing his throat, but if you must go slumming I insist that you take some escort with you. I'll go if Howard will not. I was amazed to see you down there among the secondhand stores in that part of town after what I told you the last time. I don't care why you go; it is not safe nor respectable, either."

Beth was staring at him open eyed. 'I was not down there this afternoon," maid. He came up to the table and put a little packet down on the cloth. "Beth," he said, "you don't mean it, do you? I can't let you break our engagement like this without telling me what is the matter. What have I

Beth stood up, looking like a fawn at bay. Her eyes were dilated with fear, her hands clinched. She looked from Howard to her uncle, but did not speak. Finally her uncle went over to her and put his arm around her. "What is it, little girl?" he said as one would speak to a child. Beth began to sob and then to laugh. 'It's all so funny," she sobbed. "I-I guess it's mostly my fault. I gave that gray suit away, and the hat too." The men glanced at each other and then laughed. Howard made a step forward, but Beth ran behind her chair.

"And I was at home," she said to him-"I was at home, and you did not stop-when you had asked me to go. And I was all ready and waiting for you."

"But, Beth, I met that gray suit downtown. I was sure it was you, and I didn't know what to do. I didn't know until afterward that I had gone by your house. Don't you see, dear"-But this time he came around behind the chair, too, and Uncle John sat down and pretended to eat his cold dinner.

When Uncle John reached home the next night he found the old smoking jacket and slippers laid out for him. He smelled the sulphur with which they had been fumigated and asked no questions, though he didn't really need to be told where they had come from. He had seen Beth and Howard in the big green car steering toward the secondhand district in the morning, and he had had his hopes aroused.

Not long afterward, while Beth was busy with her trousseau, her uncle came in softly and heard her saying to a caller: "But there's nothing so unwise as indiscriminate giving. I had a lesson, and I know."

A Great Catcher.

Here is a play which is vouched for by two old ball players who saw it come off and admitted to be true by the victim of the catch, big Em Gross, once the star catcher of the National league and perhaps the heaviest hitting catcher that ever donned a glove.

Em was a great catcher, a wonderful thrower and a grand hitter, but he had his weakness, and that was in catching foul flies. Some facetious writer in those days remarked that Em couldn't see the high ones in daytime.

He tried for everything in sight, ran circles around the ball and sometimes speared it, but he never felt at ease when one of those tall twisting fouls went up. He was catching in Providence one ay when a Philadelphia batter poked up a fly that looked 500 feet high, There was a wind blowing, and the ball began to twist around in circles, with Em doing a merry-go-round under it. Finally, seeing that it was escaping, he made a desperate effort to turn quickly and fell flat on his back. ++++++++++++++++++++ Instinctively he threw up his feet and hands to protect his face. The ball struck the sole of his shoe, bounded up into the air, and as it fell again Em reached out and caught it.

And the next morning Providence's papers had the nerve to say he did it on purpose.-Chicago Tribune.
