WOMAN A LIVE BROKER.

Miss Kathryn Ballou, of Memphis, is Making a Success.

One of the most active members of the brokerage division of the cottonseed product trade is Miss Kathryn Ballou, of Memphis, Tenn., who is believed to be the only woman broker in the business, says an exchange.

Miss Ballou has made a really remarkable success ever since she started in to sell cottonseed products, and her business is still growing. Along in July, 1910, Miss Ballou made a sale of 92 tanks of crude oil for future delivery, which is believed to have been the largest sale known in the history of the cottonseed oil trade, and this was an advertisement which spread her fame far and wide.

Miss Ballou first went into the business as an employee in the office of a broker in Memphis. But after a year there she started out for herself, on a very small scale at first. Her business increased to such an extent, however, that she now has two large offices in the Exchange building and a large and competent office force to take care of her orders.

DEADLY FAMILY QUARREL.

Sister Shoots Her Sister After Her Father's Death.

Crouching behind the bodies of her father and brother, who had fallen victims in a family feud, Miss Georgia Sharp, of Sherman, Tex., fought a close range shotgun battle with her brother-in-law, Henry Waldrop, in the yard of his home, and after wounding her own sister and slaying her nephew, was killed by a shot from Waldrop's weapon. Miss Sharp, a moment before being killed, had sent a charge of buckshot into Waldrop's shoulder. Thinking victory hers, she leaped toward him when he brought his gun to aim, and pulled the trigger, the charge striking her in the face.

Money owed to Waldrop by his father-in-law for clearing away timber caused the feud between the two families, and the fatal quarrel started when a young son of Waldrop's taunted L. W. Sharp, Georgia's father, as he was passing the house accompanied by his son, Walter. The latter chased the boy who was then shot down by the elder Sharp. Waldrop appeared at the door, shotgun in hand, and fired both barrels, his father-in-law and brother-in-law dropping. Georgia then took up the fight.

Girl in Cell for Striking Horse.

Rose Basher, 17 years old, of 1871 Third avenue, was sent to a cell in the East One Hundred and Fourth street station on the unique charge of assault and battery on a horse, in that she did willfully, maliciously and so forth, punch said horse in the eye.

The girl is a domestic in the home of Reuben Cohen, a painter, at 1871 Third avenue. Cohen brought the horse up in front of his shop and as it was somewhat skittish asked Rose to come out and hold it.

The horse stood steadily until some children came along and began to tease it and it began plunging. Rose told it "whoa" repeatedly, then, according to witnesses, hung a John-sonian wallop on its left eye. John Lutz, of 166 East One Hundred and Ninth street, and Frederick Bordner, of 48 East Eighty-eighth street, were passing and were moved to great indignation. They called Policeman Fallon and on their complaint she was locked up.—New York World.

Fodder Pulling.

The fodder pulling season of South Carolina is near at hand. This is a farm practice which has been a costly one to the farmers of this State for many generations, but some of the more progressive individuals of our various communities are beginning to appreciate the drawbacks of this expensive operation, and are using better rough feeds in its stead.

The chief arguments made by most farmers for the continuance of this practice is that "fodder" comes in at a time of the year when roughage is scarce, that it is a feed which is easily handled during the feeding period, and one which is relished by all horses and mules. Grant that the above reasons are good ones—will they offset the following facts which have been carefully worked out at most of our Southern Experiment Stations. First of all, fodder pulling reduces the yield of shelled corn per acre. The Florida Experiment Station reports the smallest loss of any Station, which was 2.9 bushels per acre. The Mississippi Station reports the greatest loss, which was 8 bushels per acre. The other Stations reporting gave losses ranging between the above weights, the average being 6 bushels for all the Southern States reporting. At the same time the average yield of fodder per acre was 440 pounds. With the average prices of corn at $1.00 per bushel and fodder at $1.25 per hundred pounds, and assuming that the above weights are representative of any given farm, the man who pulls fodder loses fifty cents per acre in addition to the cost and pleasure of pulling it.

While corn fodder may be a palatable feed, it has a poor feeding value when compared with other forms of hay which can be easily grown in South Carolina, such as cowpeas, oat, and vetch hay. These two crops can be grown and harvested for about $5.00 per acre each, and on average land each should give about one ton of good hay per acre, which is worth at least $20.00 per ton. Both of these crops have a high value, so if those farmers who practice fodder pulling would discontinue it and plant oats, 1½ bushels, and vetch, ¼ bushel in the fall, harvesting it in May, followed by cowpeas, they would make more rough feed per acre, which would have a higher feeding value than fodder, and would not decrease their corn yields from 3 to 8 bushels per acre; and at the same time they would be growing two leguminous crops on their land each year, thereby increasing the fertility of the soil.

Dogs Her Protectors.

Mrs. Cooke stated that she keeps the dogs as a protection, as Mr. Cooke is frequently away. The animals are always kept in the back yard and a high strong fence divides the front from the back yard. The gate in the back fence is always locked at night, and persons who call at the house are notified always to enter by the front gate. In this instance, however, the little fellow got into the yard and almost up to the porch without being detected. Two of the dogs are year old pups of the third animal, but all three are gentle, old fashioned bull dogs.

Frank Killian, though very small and harmless, appears to be suffering with germs of wanderlust. On several occasions he has left his home and the police have been notified to keep a watchout for him. Frank is said to be the tool of an older companion, and one who is somewhat versed in the wiles of the "vagabondia."

Woman's Brave Act.

Mrs. Cooke rushed into the yard and attempted to beat the dogs away from the child, but they were not to be covered. When she saw that she was helpless to rescue the boy she threw herself bodily upon him and bore him to the ground. The little fellow is so small Mrs. Cooke's body protected him well from the dogs. She took particular pains, however, to cover the child's head and throat, for she realized that should one of the dogs close his jaws upon his neck it would practically mean his death. Mrs. Cooke called to her friend to pull the dogs off, but this lady could do but little with the animals.

Letter from Uncle Jack.

Cope, S. C., June 29, 1912.

Editor The Bamberg Herald:—You doubtless will be surprised with this my first attempt to your columns but as I was larking or hunting a good dinner on yesterday and found myself headed for one of your subscribers, that big-hearted J. D. Thomas, where I had been before, I knew what awaited me. I reached his beautiful home about 10 a. m., just when he was likely to be on the further side of his big farm and to get my name in the pots, and notwithstanding a rabbit crossed the road ahead of me to the left, which forebode bad luck, I never met better, as I can vouch that one can be entertained to Jake's without his presence and I was and most royally at that.

After an hour of pleasant chat with the accomplished, I did fain to hunt Jake up and found him with his coat off, at it. Mr. Thomas has some of the best cotton and corn that I have seen, though the average crop is very low and will hardly yield more than half what it did last year. Well, after measuring yarns with Jake for a while, we were invited to the spacious dining room, where we feasted on one of the very best of good old country dinners. Oh, my! the Madam and daughters just beat themselves, and to one who has no housekeeper it was an opportunity of life, and I did do justice to the occasion, and it will add to the other great attractions for my early return to Jake's.

I would like to add a line on the rotten politics of the day, but we might butt heads on that subject, and there is already too much slang being used on the campaign for the uplift of the morals of our young generation. It ought to stop.

UNCLE JACK.

There is only one thing scarcer than news around The Herald office and that is money.

Frank's companion is said to steer him around from place to place and send him to people's back doors to beg. And it is presumed that when the little fellow was attacked yesterday by the three bull dogs he was bound on a Happy Hooligan mission up to Mrs. Cooke's back door. If this is true, it is safe to say Frank will abandon the calling.—Greenville News.

BOY TORN BY BULL DOGS.

Woman Saved Him from the Fangs of Three Ferocious Beasts.

Frank Killian, a curly haired little urchin, 12 years old, but extremely small for his age, was set upon by three ferocious bull dogs at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the yard of Mr. C. E. Cooke, 105 West Washington street, and but for the heroism of Mrs. Cooke in throwing herself upon the boy's body and shielding his face and throat from the snapping fangs of the animals, would undoubtedly have been killed.

Dr. Anthony White was called to attend the wounded child and he bandaged some twelve or fifteen ugly gashes in the little fellow's arms, legs and thigh. Mrs. Cooke purchased the boy a new suit of clothes—for the dogs left but little of those he wore—called a hack and sent him to his home at the Woodside mill village. According to latest reports, the child was resting well.

Mrs. Cooke and a friend were seated on the rear porch of the Cooke home when they noticed a small boy open the back fence gate and proceed toward the house. The child crossed the yard without the three dogs, which were lying close to Mrs. Cooke, taking any notice of him. As he was within about two steps of the door steps of the rear porch, however, the three dogs sprang at him quick as a flash and began gnashing his body with their fangs.

The Secession Oak.

Near Bluffton is a vast spreading venerable live oak, which is locally called the "Secession Oak," from a tradition that the withdrawal of South Carolina from the Union—and also, perhaps, though indirectly, the war between the sections—was determined by a conference held in its shade, sometime before the meeting of the Secession Convention at Columbia, by the wealthy planters of the coast section, many of whom were accustomed to retreat to Bluffton in summer from their fertile but malarial plantations. What authority may inhere in this tradition we do not know, but the notion is not incredible that the issue of secession or adherence to the Union may have been practically decided at some such informal meeting, for the planters of the coast region possessed at that time a degree of influence in the affairs of the State which was disproportionate to their relative numbers in the population, though not so disproportionate, in fact, when their relative wealth, education and public spirit are allowed proper weight. The "Secession Oak" tradition is at least worthy, it would seem, of some attention at the hands of investigators. Very likely it has equal authority with traditions that have distinguished other trees which have become celebrated as historic.—The Columbia State.

Familiarity and Contempt.

There is in a western town a judge who occasionally hits the flowing bowl until it puts him down and out. One morning, following an unusually swift encounter with the alcoholic foe, he appeared in his office sad and shaken up.

"How are you this morning, Sam?" inquired a friend.

"Worse than I have ever been," replied the judge with a groan. "I'm in bad at home. When I left the house, a little while ago, the children were calling me Sam and my wife was addressing me as 'Mister.'"—Popular Magazine.
