

DAGUERRETYPES IN FAVOR.

Portraits of a Generation Ago Are Now Treasured.

Fashion takes many backward flights. It already has been affected by "ways back in the early days" tendencies in the furnishings of the home, the style of dress, customs and manners. Now it is taking a turn at daguerreotype photograph, says the Minneapolis Journal.

New York society is daguerreotype mad. Minneapolis society is following suit.

Until recently the daguerreotype photograph album has been tucked away, far out of sight. Today its contents are taken out and given a place in the cabinet that contains the choicest family heirlooms.

At present the person having in his or her possession old family daguerreotypes may revel in the knowledge of such ownership. A merry hunt for the old style portraits is on. Coffers and chests are ransacked. What joy, when out from the depth of dust-covered trunks are brought to light the likeness of grand and great-grandparents, immortalized on tin or copper plate.

Metals are precious articles nowadays, but this only adds to the zest of revival of daguerreotype photography. New York has given out the decree that to own a daguerreotype always has been one of the proofs of social standing and rank, for "only the well-to-do could afford to have them in the olden days."—Washington Star.

Humming Birds' Nests.

Even in those parts of tropical America where, as in Colombia, humming birds are vastly numerous, it is almost impossible for the most experienced naturalist to find their nests. And this, although, as a rule, they are not hidden at all—the feathered builders relying for concealment upon the likeness of their tiny houses to the surroundings amid which they are placed. A hummer's nest always corresponds exactly in color with the branch to which it is attached. It may imitate a knot or other excrescence. Thus the Calliope hummingbird of the western United States often builds on a dead pine twig, either upon or near a cone of similar size and hue.

Usually the nests of humming birds are cup shaped or turban shaped, and their material is always plant down. Such down, resembling cotton-wood, but of more delicate fibre, is gathered from the stems of ferns and other plants. This is woven together with spider's webs into a compact mass. Usually they ornament the outside of the nest with small feathers, or lichens which they obtain by detaching them from the rocks where these humble plants grow. These they fasten with cobwebs all over the exterior of their tiny house.

When these wee architects suspend their nests from leaves or tendrils, they are always weighed for stability, in order that they may not be upset by every passing breeze. For this purpose the bottom is made very thick. But the most remarkable expedient is that adopted by the hill-stars, which dwell far up near the snow-line of the Andes; they weight the tiny, suspended house on the lighter side with a pebble, to give the proper balance. There is no question whatever that this is done, and many of the nests of such species, preserves in collections, are found to contain pebbles.—Rose L. Honeyman in St. Nicholas.

ICEBERG PATROL.

Steps Taken by United States to Guard Against Icebergs.

Ever since the Titanic disaster the United States government has maintained an iceberg patrol. Revenue cutters and scout cruisers of the regular navy are employed in the work. They patrol the Grand Banks for about three months, beginning in April or May. They even tried to demolish icebergs by firing shells at them and succeeded in smashing off tons of ice at a time; although, of course, in the case of big icebergs it is not practicable to destroy them completely by gun fire. The patrol boats chart all of the bergs sighted, and report by wireless to the government their location, the direction in which they are traveling and their speed. The chief effort of the patrol service at present is to discover the most effective means of detecting the presence of icebergs at night or in fog, and the various expedients devised are described in an article by H. M. Snevily in the June St. Nicholas. One of the greatest dangers of icebergs hitherto, it is stated, has been that little or no change in the temperature of the air can be noted in time to veer the ship aside, if she is headed toward the berg at any considerable speed.

TO PUMP OUT ZUIDER ZEE.

Project Will Cost the Netherlands Ninety Million Dollars.

The problem of removing the water from the flooded district of North Holland has revived the project of drying the Zuider Zee, writes Commercial Attache Erwin W. Thompson from The Hague, and a bill is now before the Netherlands parliament for appropriating money for this work. The cost is estimated at ninety million dollars. The principal dam would be about fifteen miles long, averaging twenty feet in height.

One of the most important results accruing from the drying of the Zuider Zee would be that the new dams would take the place of the several hundred miles of dikes that now protect the lowlands from the Zuider Zee. Under present conditions a strong northwest wind tends to blow the waters of the North sea into the Zuider Zee and to raise the level of the latter until it sometimes breaks over the protecting dikes and inundates the low polders or meadows.

The flooded district in North Holland, which has brought up the Zuider Zee project, comprises forty thousand acres. This territory is all below sea level, and is protected from the North sea by a line of natural sand dunes for most of the distance, and along other stretches by heavy dikes built largely of granite. On the east side, however, the province is protected from the Zuider Zee by a line of earth embankments. The January storm broke through these embankments in several places and inundated the country.

The provincial authorities are now engaged in repairing these breaks in the embankments or dikes, and as soon as these are completed they will begin pumping out the flood water. The arrangement of locks and sluices is such that at low tide in the North sea, and sometimes in the Zuider Zee, the water can be drained out to a certain level, but below that it must be pumped. The average height to which the water must be lifted is only three to four feet, but the total amount to be pumped approximates seven billion cubic feet.

There are many steam pumping stations throughout the district, which were destined primarily for taking care of the regular rainfall in the low districts and for pumping water into the high level canals. These pumps will be used to their full capacity, but will necessarily have to be supplemented by many new ones.

If the bill for drying the Zuider Zee is passed by the Netherlands parliament, it is possible that American contractors may be called upon to build the dams and do the pumping.

Caruso and Chaplin Meet.

Two members of the high salary club in the amusement world, Enrico Caruso and Charley Chaplin, met in the tenor's dressing room at the Metropolitan opera house recently, in an entr'acte of "Rigoletto," which William J. Guard, who keeps news of the Metropolitan from appearing in the newspapers, was responsible for the meeting, taking Mr. Chaplin by his salary and leading him into Mr. Caruso's dressing room.

"This is the Caruso of the cinema," began Mr. Guard.

The tenor, who was making up in front of his mirror, gave a quizzical look at the stranger and grunted a "Huh?"

"Charley Chaplin," explained Mr. Guard.

"Aha!" said Mr. Caruso, dropping his rouge stick and eyebrow pencil. "Aha! I congratulate you—you make nice contracts."

"Oh, I don't know," modestly side-stepped Mr. Chaplin. "What about yourself?"

"Don't mention it," shrinkingly replied the tenor.

"Well, gentlemen, I leave you two to argue it out. But before arranging it, promise not to take all the money in the world," pleaded Mr. Guard as he went out, leaving the two members of the highly salary trust together.

ANOTHER VIEWPOINT.

Our Present Industrial Unpreparedness.

There are three concerns in this country today that make practically all the gauges and inspection tools for this country, and ship much of that same material to Europe, declares Howard E. Coffin, in World's Work. Those concerns are all in New England—incidentally two are in seacoast cities. They have gotten together and have compiled figures more or less for their own information. Those figures show that to produce 200,000 shells a day in this country of the sizes required by the army and navy would require an equipment in measuring tools and gauges and inspection gauges alone of from 17 million to 20 million tools and would take the combined capacity of their plants five years to produce them, and the lack of these tools is one of the main reasons today why American manufacturers are unable to fill orders from Europe.

Music Everywhere.

Every village contains a potential singing society, every church contains a potential choir, every family in which there are children might sing simple songs together, writes Thomas W. Surette, in the Atlantic. There is a singing club hidden away in every neighborhood. Every city might have, on occasion, thousands of people singing fine songs and hymns. What is the present need? Leaders—educated musicians who have learned the technique of their art and have, at the same time, learned to understand and appreciate the greatest music, and who prefer it to any other. Our institutions for training musicians are sending out a continual stream of graduates, many of whom begin their labors in small towns and cities. Nearly every community has at least one man with sufficient technical knowledge of music to direct groups of singers, large and small.

Up to Mr. McLaurin.

The suggestion made by Mr. N. B. Dial that he and Senator McLaurin hold a joint meeting in each of the congressional districts of the State for the purpose of discussing the State warehouse ought to meet with the hearty approval of Mr. McLaurin, who has expressed a desire to have the warehouse system fully explained before the people. This is a common sense suggestion of Mr. Dial's and carrying it out only hinges upon the consent of Mr. McLaurin. It is hardly to be expected that any county chairman would refuse to call a meeting for a discussion of this important question, but in case any of them should refuse Mr. McLaurin and Mr. Dial could call their own meeting. There is nothing now to prevent the question from being fully aired. Will Mr. McLaurin take up the gauntlet?—Laurens Advertiser.

HORSE MUST HAVE HIS BEER.

"Bull" Steps Up to Bar and Whinnies for Long, Cold One.

Hale and hearty at 25 and able to do a good day's work despite his fondness for beer is the record of Bull, a truck horse owned by the Globe Brewery company, Hanover street, near Barre.

For twenty years Bull has taken his glass of beer at the bar kept by the company at its plant after coming in from a day's work. What is more, he knows when he has had enough. He drinks his beverage from a glass, and after two or three glasses he trots to his stall and nothing can prevail upon him to drink more.

The horse does not need to have his keeper, Patrick J. Feeney, ask the man behind the bar for his "drink," but walks up and whinnies or paws the ground.

Bull also drinks while on duty, but this does not seem to have impaired his efficiency to any great extent. His keeper says that when the horse is delivering goods he will often stand in front of a saloon of one of the older customers and not budge until he has been given a drink. Bull has never been sick in all his twenty years of service at the Globe plant. His former mate, Mike, did not imbibe, and consequently, so it is said, dropped dead on the street during a hot spell.—Boston Sun.

Not The Greatest.

"Sir," said the sleek-looking agent, approaching the desk of the meek-looking man and opening one of those folding thimblemags showing styles of bookbinding. "I believe I can interest you in this massive set of books containing the speeches of the world's greatest orators. Seventy volumes, $1 down and $1 a month until the price, $680, has been paid. This set of books gives you the most celebrated speeches of the greatest talkers the world has ever known and—"

"Let me see the index," said the meek man, according to Farming business.

The agent handed it to him and he looked through it carefully and methodically, running his finger along the list of names. Reaching the end he handed the index back to the agent and said: "It isn't what you claim it is. I happen to know the greatest talker in the world, and you haven't got her in the index."

The American Way.

A foreigner was commenting on the strange perversity of the American.

"Why, you can even see it in his cocktail, a strictly American drink," he said.

"How is that?" he was asked.

"Why, he puts in sugar to make it sweet and lemon to make it sour, ice to make it cold and gin to make it hot, and says 'here's to you'—and drinks it himself."
