HOW many rounds before the knock out? That knock out blow, when "Mr. Out-of-Town Trade" gets his final "wallop" from home interests. Are we in training for it? Here is a fight in which the interests of the entire country are one. It is all of us—you and me and our children and our neighbors, our town and our neighboring towns—against this one evil. Our champion is ourselves—all of us, welded together into one cooperative whole. Will our man win? And when? It all depends on us. If we think as one man, act as one man, trade at home as one man, then we are in good training for that final knock out. In reality we are not at the ring side. We are in the fight. In this picture we see ourselves, arrayed as Home interests, triumphant.

NAPOLEON AND AMERICA.

Great Soldier Held a High Regard for This Country.

The Revolution and the influence of the young United States is said to have had a strong influence upon the career of Napoleon Bonaparte. Many of the early memoranda left by Bonaparte contains reference to America, to Deane, "the first deputy of the United Provinces of Versailles," and to "Monsieur" Franklin.

After his marriage to Josephine, Bonaparte's interest in American affairs must have been considerably enhanced. That his pride in the French achievements beyond the Atlantic was sustained, is indicated by his reception of Rochambeau at the Tuilleries.

With the opening of the nineteenth century the academic interest of Napoleon in the new world was to assume a practical form. He became deliberately engaged in the attempt to found, or to re-found a French empire in America and when we come to measure his resources at that time, it was by no means the most quixotic of his adventures.

Public opinion in France sustained the government in its trans-Atlantic enterprise. The French had regarded the cession of Louisiana to Spain only thirteen years before our revolutionary war, as the weakest act of the weak administration of Louis XV.

But the dream of Napoleon for American conquest was to have its awakening. Instead of Gallicizing the valley of the Mississippi, as he had planned to do, he turned his attention to the conquest of the Holy Roman empire as more to his liking, thereby transferring his subversive energies from the youngest republic to the oldest monarchy.

The scene of American relations with Napoleon and influence upon his destinies now shifts to the European side of the Atlantic. This shift helped materially in the downfall of Napoleon. The great Frenchman tried to prevent the European nations receiving supplies through an inland blockade and endeavored to close all the ports of the European mainland from the Levant around to the Baltic, but at this time the United States, a nation only twenty years old, developed a mercantile marine which was destined to affect the fate of nations.

The American "skippers," in spite of Napoleon, penetrated the harbors of the world from Riga to Singapore. As a neutral power and under its commercial treaties, the United States was entitled to trade freely with the belligerent powers, unless their harbors were blockaded. As a matter of fact there was no naval blockade by France or her allies.

In the face of these breaches of his continental system, Napoleon concluded that the complete domination of Russia must precede the commercial ruin and consequent submission of England. Hence the great invasion of 1812. Whether the outcome might not have resulted from some other cause, the fact remains that the presence of our neutral fleets provided the czar with a means of relieving the commercial necessities of his empire, and his resort to that relief provoked the French invasion. In short, the performance and ubiquity of our merchant cruisers furnished the weapon which severed the continental system. The retreat from Moscow gave it the final stroke, and was itself the beginning of the end of the Napoleonic empire.

Even in the "last phase" our country sustained a certain association with the captive of St. Helena. The English felt that any danger of rescue would originate on the western shore of the Atlantic. Admiral Cockburn occupied the neighboring island of Ascension, avowedly to prevent it falling into the hands of Yankee raiders.

The feeling in the United States against England was at that time quite bitter. Napoleon's landing at St. Helena followed the battle of New Orleans only about seven months and the downfall of the revolutionary monarch aroused a deep sympathy throughout this country.

But the actual grounds for the belief in the existence of a rescue party and rescue plans in the United States rested upon the movements of Gen. Lallamand and his associates. His devotion to the emperor was loyal and persistent. He had tried to accompany him to St. Helena, and then escaped to this country.

Many French refugees had landed in this country and our government granted them 100,000 acres on the banks of the Tombigby river, but they sold this land and settled on the Trinity river in Texas, nearer the sea. All the circumstances indicate that it was not the intention of Lallamand and his followers to found an agricultural colony, but to unite about 1,000 old soldiers for the deliverance of the great prisoner. Preparations for the enterprise were nearing completion when the news arrived of the emperor's death.—News and Courier.

Great Resource.

Dewey, discussing the naval battle of Shagerrak, said at a Washington luncheon:

"A naval officer, to succeed, must be very quick witted and resourceful. In fact he must be like Hamilton Footlites.

"Ham Footlites leaned on the rail of his sea-going yacht soliloquizing about love while the blue waves rolled and heaved splendidly, each blue wave being a super under a roll of canvas.

"But the waves were here and there threadbare, and suddenly a wave ripped and a head bobbed up in the midst of the heaving sea and stared around in bewildering fashion.

"Ham Footlites silenced the audience's titters with one stern glance.

"Man overboard!" he yelled in stentorian tones.

"Then the super, managing to draw back his head through the hole in the wave, disappeared. Ham Footlites heaved a stormy sigh.

"Another victim seized by the remorseless sea, alas!" he said.—Roanoke Times.

Here's a Big Idea.

Some time ago, says the Christian Endeavor World, Mrs. Brown called at the home of Mrs. Jones to talk over the fashions and things, and somewhere about sixty-fifth lap of the conversation the caller referred to the young daughter of the hostess.

"By the way, dear," remarked Mrs. Brown inquisitively, "where is Minnie? I haven't seen her for an age."

"Minnie is at college," proudly responded the fond mother, and then added, "and I am so worried about her. I haven't had a letter for nearly two weeks."

"There is where you make a mistake," was the prompt rejoinder of Mrs. Brown. "Instead of letting her go to college why don't you send her to one of those correspondence schools?"—Kansas City Star.

Sad Case.

"I certainly do feel sorry for Mrs. Doppel."

"Why so?"

"She patronizes Mrs. Dubson whenever she gets a chance, but Mrs. Dubson is blissfully unconscious of it, so it's no satisfaction to her at all."—Judge.
