THAT FILBERT SPEECH.

The Yorkville Enquirer, replying to The Herald's editorial last week regarding the utterance of the former governor of South Carolina at Filbert, York county, when he said: "They talk about a free America. I don't care what kind of America it is when I am dead and gone," after reprinting the editorial in question, says:

Pretty shrewd political squib this, and one of many of the same kind that has been going the rounds to these many months.

"The Yorkville Enquirer is a newspaper of veracity." Thank you, it tries to be. It would not misrepresent anybody through fear, favor, reward or hope of reward.

Mr. Blease used the words quoted, or substantially those words, at Filbert, on the occasion in question, or he would not have been so reported, but surely The Bamberg Herald does not assume that the Yorkville Enquirer is able to compress a four column speech into a column and a half.

In order to emphasize the parts of the speech they did print, both the State and the Herald undertook to emphasize the fact that the Enquirer is "a Blease supporter."

We have reported Mr. Tillman at Filbert, also Messrs. Lever, Richards, McLaurin and scores of others, and we have tried to report one as fairly as the other.

The testimony that the Yorkville Enquirer is a paper of veracity sounds pleasant; but we would not give much for the veracity of a newspaper that would be influenced in its report of a speech by its liking or disliking the speaker.

If the Yorkville Enquirer is Blease or anti-Bleaze, we simply do not know it, that is all. We are aware that just as Tillman says he "tied McLaurin and Blease together," with the idea of hurting them and benefiting his own side, different individuals have tried to tie the Enquirer and Blease together for the purpose of injuring both and benefiting themselves.

This paper belongs only to the publishers and the politicians understand that fact about as well as the public understands it.

Mr. Blease says he is coming to Yorkville to discuss this Filbert speech before the people of York county, and when he comes, the Enquirer will do as it did in the case of the Filbert speech—report him as completely as it can.

The Enquirer also calls The Herald's attention to a portion of the speech of the former governor which we did not reprint. We were not discussing the former governor's speech. The question is one of veracity between the former governor and the Enquirer. The Enquirer says the former governor said what he was reported as saying. The former governor does not exactly deny saying it, but he does say "They knew they lied when they said it." The Enquirer reiterates that the former governor says what it reported him as saying. That is sufficient. That one assertion, that "he didn't care what kind of America there is after he is dead," negatives everything he could have said in favor of the war.

We did not think it amiss to ask the Enquirer what it thought about such a man—especially in view of the fact that it had supported that man. We still don't think it amiss. We have no desire to embarrass the Enquirer, but we feel sure, speaking from a broad standpoint, it would not mind saying whether or not it will lend its support to any candidate who does not care what kind of country we have after he is dead—regardless of how many times he subsequently vociferates his patriotism. To be entirely plain, will the Enquirer support a man who denounces it as a liar?

When we read the ravings of the Charleston American about Manning stealing the election, we are constrained to think that the American's editorial page is something like its personal column—largely mythical.

Bamberg county, so far as has been reported, appears to be the first county in the State, and perhaps in the country, to exceed its quota of war savings stamps during the W. S. S. campaign. The fact that the quota has been reached and exceeded, however, is not to be taken as an indication that the campaign is over with. The county is allotted nearly $400,000 worth of stamps during the year, and it is hoped that practically every dollar of this immense sum will have been pledged by the close of the campaign on June 28th.

News Note—It is reported on good authority from Atlanta that W. P. Beard, body-guard to the former governor of South Carolina, will not tour the State with the campaign party this summer, having a pressing engagement at the federal prison in that city.

Friday is Merchant's Day. On that day practically every merchant of the county has agreed to invest his total cash sales in war savings stamps. Let the people bear this in mind, and make all the purchases they can on that date for cash. This suggestion is not made to encourage useless buying, but the people are asked to buy on the day such things as they anticipate buying in the near future, and, if possible, pay cash for their purchases. The merchants will appreciate this, and it will be a great aid to the war savings stamp campaign.

IN MEMORIAM. In sad and loving memory of our dear little son, Edwin O'Quinn, who fell asleep in Jesus on June 18, 1916, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. O'Quinn. Two years have passed, but still we miss him. Friends may think the wound is healed; But there are none who know the sorrow Deep within our hearts concealed. How sad the memory of that morning. As we stood with breaking hearts, Seeing the one we loved so dearly Pierced by death's most cruel darts. Gone in his age of an infant; Gone in his fairest bloom; Buried from us forever "Deep in a silent tomb. Our life is lonesome, home is sad; Our hearts are filled with pain. We feel like one who never will have A happy day in life again. We often sit and think of you, darling, When we are all alone; For memory is the only friend, That grief can call its own. Our very light and love of home That came, we thought to stay, To make us happy while we live, Too soon was called away. Dearest son, thou hast left us, And thy loss we deeply feel; But 'tis God who hath bereft us; He will all our sorrows heal. Long days and nights he bore in pain To wait for cure was all in vain; But God, who knoweth all things best, Did ease his pain and give him rest. Dearest son, we have laid thee 'In a peaceful grave's embrace; But thy memory will be cherished, Till we see thy heavenly face. You are gone, but not forgotten; Never will your memory fade, For our thoughts will ever linger Round the grave where you are laid. Rest, dearest one, free from all pain; Your sisters hope in God's kingdom to meet thee again. You are not to be forgotten or will you ever be. For as long as life and memory last we will always think of thee. There was an angel band in heaven that was not quite complete; God took our darling one to fill the vacant seat. MOTHER AND SISTERS.

IN MEMORY OF EDWIN O'QUINN.

These few lines I am writing in memory of Edwin Jacob O'Quinn. Two years ago today, June 18, the angel of death came to our home and took away our beloved brother, aged nine years, eight months and four days. The little angel band in heaven was not quite complete; So God took our dear loved one to fill that vacant seat. Sleep on, dear one, and take thy rest; God took you home—he thought it best. His memory is as fresh to me as the day he passed away. HIS SISTER, CLARA O'QUINN.

The Year of Thrift

This year marks the anniversary of the establishment of the first savings bank in the United States. In commemoration of this centennial, bankers' organizations are speeding up the thrift movement. Strangely enough, this effort comes at a time when national progress in commerce and industry depend on the people's power to save. No longer can America draw on the savings of the thrifty people of Europe for capital with which to develop its resources. From now on the United States must produce its own capital.

An account in a savings bank insures national progress and your own independence.
