Paige Almost Didn't Make Allstar List

NEW YORK (CNS) - Ole Satch Paige almost didn't make he all-star dream team, despite his sterling relief performances this year for the St. Louis Browns plus the agitation of his boss, Bill Veeck. For even Casey Stengel, manager of the American League team this year admits that Paige was not on his first list of pitchers. But the Boston Red Sox pitcher, Ellis Kinder, was.

When Boston's manager, Lou Boudreau notified Stengel that Kinder had not worked since June 7th and that he had been placed on the inactive list with a slipped disc in his spine, only then was Satch named.

The bell clanged wildly demanding silence. The announcer acquainted the boisterous crowd with the facts. Record books duly recorded that Joey Maxim retained his lightthis 6-2, 185 pound youngster heavyweight title with a 14 round technical knockout. Claims were immediately posted that the heat beat Sugar Ray. It was 103 degrees under the blazing arcs. Robinson, pressing the attack with fancy combinations of punches had built up a commanding lead, winning approximately nine rounds. He was throwing the majority of blows, moving around faster, consuming more energy. But was it the heat that really beat Robinson? Where was Maxim all this time-in Alaska sitting on a cool iceberg?
