

THE SILENT SHORE

THE MYSTERY OF ST. JAMES' PARK

that I do not wish his money, I shall not; and more especially for the reason that you have shown me our marriage would be postponed if I did so. But never make such a remark again to me. You know me well enough to know that I am not of the stuff that murderers and fratricides are made of.

"I beg your pardon," Phillip said; "of course I did not speak in earnest."

"On this subject we will, if you please, speak in nothing else but earnest. And, if you will help me with your advice, I shall be glad to have it."

"Let us go over the ground then," his friend said, "and consider carefully what you have to do. In the first place you have to look at the matter from two different points of view. One point is that you lose all claim to his money—yes, yes, I know," as Lord Penlyn made a gesture of contempt at the mention of the money—"all claim by keeping your secret. It is better, however, that you should so keep it. But, on the other hand, there is, of course, the chance—a remote one, a thousand to one chance, but still a chance—that he may have left some paper behind him which would prove your relationship to each other. In that case you would, of course, have no alternative but to acknowledge that you were brothers."

"And what would the world think of me then?"

"That you had simply done as he bade you, and keep the secret."

"It would think that I murdered him. It would be natural that the world should think so. He stood between me and everything, except Ida's love, and people might imagine that he possessed that too. And his murder, coming so soon after he disclosed himself to me, would make appearances against me doubly black."

"Who is to know when he disclosed himself to you? For aught the world knows, you might have been aware of your relationship for years."

"Then I was living a lie for years?"

"Do not wind round the subject so! And remember that, in very fact, you have done no harm. A week ago you did not know this secret."

"Well," Penlyn said, springing up from his chair, "things must take their course. If it comes out it must; if not, I shall never breathe a word to any one. Fate has cursed me with this trouble, I must bear it as best I can. The only thing I wish is that I had never gone to that hotel. That would also tell against me if anything was known."

"It was a pity, but it can't be helped. Now, go to Belmont, but be careful to hold your tongue."

Lord Penlyn did so to Belmont, having previously sent telegram saying he was coming, and he traveled down in one of the special trains that was conveying a contingent of fashionable people to the second day at Ascot. But their joyousness, and the interest that they all took in the one absorbing subject, "What would win the Cup?" only made him feel doubly miserable. Why, he pondered, should these persons be so happy, when he was so wretched? And then, when they were tired of discussing the racing, they turned to the other great subject that was now agitating people's minds, the murder in St. James' Park. He listened with interest to all they had to say on that matter, and he found that, whatever the different opinions of the travelers in the carriage might be as to who the murderer was, they were all agreed as to the fact that it was no common murder committed for robbery, but one done for some more powerful reason.

"He stood in some one's light," one gentleman said, whom, from his appearance, Lord Penlyn took to be a barrister, "and that person has either removed him from this earth, or caused him to be removed. I should not like to be his heir, for on that man suspicion will undoubtedly fall, unless he can prove very clearly that he was miles away from London on Monday night."

Penlyn started as he heard these words. His heir! Then it would be on him that suspicion would fall if it were ever known that he was the heir; and, as he thought that, among his brother's papers, there might be something to prove that he was in such a position, a cold sweat broke out upon his forehead. How could he prove himself "miles away from London" on that night? Even the sleepy porter could not say at that time he returned to the hotel? Nothing, he reflected, could save him if there was any document among the papers that Stuart was probably ransacking by now that would prove that he and Cundall were brothers.

He thought that, after all, it would be better he should tell Ida, and he made up his mind by five time he had arrived at the nearest station to Belmont, that he would do so. It would be far better than the information, starting as it might be, should come from him than from any other source. And while he was being driven swiftly over to Sir Paul's villa, he again told himself that it would be the best thing to do.

Only when he got to Belmont, he found his strength of mind begin to waver. The news of Cundall's dreadful death had had the effect of entirely breaking up the baronet's Ascot party. Every one here knew on what friendly terms the dead man had been both with father and daughter, and had been witness to the distress that both had felt at hearing the fatal tidings—Idea, indeed, had retired to her room, which she kept altogether; and consequently all the guests, with the exception of Miss Norris, had taken their departure. That young lady, whose heart was an extremely kind

Good Roads.

Senator LaCimber will secure a favorable report in the senate on his good roads bill, it is reported. The bill appropriates many millions of dollars, and when divided out among the states the sum will help but little in the good roads movement. It seems that the only really practical plan to build good roads is for people to build them, and not depend on a government appropriation. This has been done in this state and can be done again, if the people really want good roads.—Columbia Record.

An explosion of over two thousand pounds of powder on board the battleship Missouri last Wednesday caused the death of nearly twenty-five men. They were at target practice on the range near Pensacola, Fla. They let their enthusiasm get the best of their good judgment and an accident that could have been averted resulted.

Hamburg Deserted—Never!

The sinking fund has received from some citizens of Hamburg a petition asking them to sell the street of that town. These residents—there are not a great many names on the petition—deny that Hamburg is deserted and say that the sale would only be a scheme for unscrupulous speculators to acquire valuable real estate.—State April 14th.

The Missouri accident will be thoroughly investigated. Quick firing records are said to account for this violation of orders. The blame will more than likely be laid on the dead officers.

The Emperor of Corea is without a home. His imperial palace was destroyed by fire last week. The fire was caused by repairs being made on a heater. He has our sympathy, but the homes of the mighty must pay tribute to modern improvements and conveniences.

Mrs. Rufus Bush, of Augusta, was buried at death at her home in Augusta, Ga., last Friday night. She was sick at the time, but got up and went to a concert in which her bed clothes were kept. Nothing further can be told, but it is presumed the bed clothes caught fire and she was too weak to leave the closet.

Letter to C. W. Farber, Batesburg, S. C.

Dear Sir: Some think we take a good deal of risk in inviting complaints of Devco-Land-and-Zinc—we authorize our agent to sell it under this guarantee:

"If you have any fault to find with this paint, either now in putting it on or hereafter in the wear, tell your dealer about it."
"We authorize him to do what is right at our expense."

The following story tells how little the risk is:
J. H. Asler & Co., hardware dealers, Rhinebeck, N. Y., have sold thousands of gallons and have had just one complaint in all this time.
Three sides of a house were perfect; the fourth was as bad as the three were good.

Explanation—It rained the night before the fourth side was painted; and the painters didn't wait for the wood to dry.

What is done in such a case? Whatever the dealer who sold the paint, considers it fair to do. We leave it to him. He may not do exactly what we should do if we were there; but we are not there. The best we can do is to leave it to him.

Yours truly,
F. W. DEVCO & CO.

Dear Sir—Over fifty years ago, our firm began selling paint throughout the South; since we have continued uninterrupted, and ten times over than any other brand of paint. Read the following:

"Have used the L. & M. Paint twenty years; houses with it eight years ago show better to-day than houses painted with other paints within two years."

"Have used all brands of paint; L. & M. Pure Paint stands better, and wears longer than any other paint I have ever used in my ten years experience."

"I painted our old homestead with L. & M. Paint twenty-six years ago. Not painted since looks better than houses painted in the last four years with other paint."

"H. S. Scafield, Harris Springs, S. C., used the L. & M. Paint for six years. Paint of other houses with it have been years ago; they have no more of it painting since."
