

Mimnaugh's After Stock Taking Sale

We have just finished taking stock and find that notwithstanding the phenomenal clearance sale that was run during the week before we took stock, we still have too many goods in some departments. In order to move these goods quickly we have put the prices lower than ever before. Read these money saving bargains;

Muslin Underwear.

During the coming week we mean to clean up this Muslin Underwear Department, regardless of price, so this is your chance to buy bargains in this line. You will find these goods displayed on the second floor, in different lots. Never before have you been able to purchase these goods at the prices that will prevail during the coming week. In all the Underwear offered you will find Gowns, Petticoats, Skirts, Corset covers, Pants and Combination suits. The materials include nainsook, long-cloth and cambric.

Millinery Department.

In this department we still have left a few of the French as well as domestic patterns. Our millinery business this season has been a record-breaker, and now, after taking stock, as the season is coming to a close, we are going to put on sale our entire Millinery stock at prices that must certainly move it. We also have left a few of those lovely white Beavers, trimmed in hand-made flowers, in all the latest shapes. Come in and let us show you what bargains you can now get in headwear.

See Embroidery Window

$1,600.00 worth of fine Embroideries; in lawns, cambric and nainsook, all go on sale at sensational prices. In this lot is also a large assortment of all-over Embroideries to match.

Mail Orders Filled
Columbia, S. C.

MIMNAUGH'S

Mail Orders Filled
Columbia, S. C.

Art Squares and Rugs.

Now is your opportunity to purchase Art Squares and lovely rugs at prices you will find to be away under other dealers. After taking stock we find there is yet on hand a number of the rich 9x12 Smyrna and Axminster Art Squares in all the oriental and floral designs. These rugs and squares go on sale at prices that will certainly appeal to your purse. All $25 art squares will go at $16.98. The $15 and $18 Brussels Squares 9x12 will go at $11.49 each.

Do not fail to also take advantage of the sacrifice sale of window curtains in all the new scrims with lace edges, at from 15c to 50c per yard.

Sacrifice Silk Sale.

After taking stock we have decided to close out all remaining Silk waist patterns and remnants. Now is also the time to buy your dress goods. We can show you the very latest styles and at prices that will certainly astonish you.

One lot of ladies leather belts, worth 50 and 75c, at 10c each.

Skirt Bargains

Tomorrow and during the coming week is your last chance on fine skirts at unheard-of prices prices that must move them before the end of the week. These Skirts include Voiles, Panamas, Mohairs and fancies of all descriptions.

Ladies' Suits Half Price

Look at our window display of $20.00 and $25.00 Ladies' Suits for $10.00. After taking stock we find a big line of Ladies' Skirts yet remain. These must now go at your own price. Look at our fine Evening Dresses and see if you can afford to be bothered with having yours made. If you are looking for bargains in Shirt-waists it will certainly pay you to visit Mimnaugh's.

One lot of Children's School Dresses, all sizes, will be sold this week at bargain prices.

BATESBURG ADVOCATE
A TRI-COUNTY PAPER.

which he has been chosen in such a way as to make the other fellow say "I told you so."

N. ROGE S BAYLY, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR,
BATESBURG, - - - - S. C.

Published Every Friday.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year $1.00
Six Months 50 cents
No three month subscriber $0.50 entered at the P. O. at Batesburg, S. C., as second-class matter, Feb. 14, 1901.

A copy sent on request.

One Inch One Year
One Inch Six Months
One Inch Three Months
First page double the above amounts.
Local Insertions 25cts per inch. First Page
Advertisers receive one free copy of the paper and one copy of the Advocate.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 20 1911

The origin of the "Mobile Home" has been much discussed. One author says that some one couple in the process of driving off in their mobile home.

Did anyone start a diary this year? If so, future generations will know what they were doing for at least two or three weeks in January.

The reason why the modern girl is so slow to get married is that while her mother was satisfied merely to be fed, the daughter requires also to be entertained.

Cole L. Blease is now Governor of South Carolina. To him we extend our congratulations and hope that he may fill the high office to

TOLSTOY WANTED BLOOD.

His Quarrel With Turgeneff and the Reconciliation That Followed.

Raymond recently in the English Théâtre gives the following account of an early encounter between Tolstoi and Turgeneff, which shows the Russian sage in a different frame of mind from the one in which the world has since come to know him:

It was on the estate of his friend, the poet Fet, near Yasnaya. Turgeneff was among the invited guests. The hostess inquired after his daughter, who was being remedied in France. Turgeneff spoke highly of his English governess. "With a truly British exactitude," he said, "she requested me to fix the sum which my daughter might spend for charity. And now she teaches her pupil to mend the ragged clothes of the poor."

"And you consider that a good thing?" asked Tolstoi.

"Certainly," replied the other, "in bringing the benefactor into closer contact with the person whom he is helping."

"Oh my god! I think that a well-educated woman like her does little and it is still more important to have a happy life than to be a saint."

"I am not a saint, but I speak in accordance with the truth."

"Why do you say what I am convinced is the truth?" demanded Tolstoi.

"You think, then, that I am educated by my daughter's teacher?" said Tolstoi. "I am not educated, nor will talk to others about myself. Your daughter has been educated by her mother, though she has no mother."

Tolstoi was silent. At the neighbor's door, a man in a dark coat, Turgeneff's old butler, entered. He entered his room, where his master had retired to a small room, where he was resting.

The butler, who had been waiting outside, came in and told Tolstoi that the man who had been in the room had gone.

Tolstoi, who was still silent, declared, means the prize of a social clique for some, and blame for others. But instead of entertaining jealous regrets, the excluded should create circles of their own.

Thus they can make themselves a social power to be reckoned with by the elite higher class.

In the country and many obscure city streets, the motive for getting together is rarely to create social cliques for future social competition. Instead it is the genuine tie that unites all who have common work and play, and are good neighbors.

Turgeneff forgave, as one may imagine, but the complete and definitive reconciliation took place much later.

OLD ENGLISH HOUSES.

In the Days of Wooden Huts, Thatched Roofs and Clay Floors.

The habitations of English common people for centuries consisted of a wooden hut of one room, with the fire built in the center. To this hut, if a man increased in family and wealth, a lean-to was added and later another and another. The roofs were of thatch, the beds of loose straw or straw beds with bolsters of the same laid on the floor or perhaps eventually shut in by a shelf and ledge like the berths of a ship or by a small closet.

The Saxon thatch or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or fighting sat on long benches on either side of the fire and, as John Hay puts it, "eatily drank and jawed" or, gathering at long boards placed on trestles, regaled themselves on some sort of porridge with fish and milk or meat and ale.

The Saxon "hut" or knight built a more pretentious "hut," a large open room like the Roman atrium with a lofty roof thatched or covered with slates or wooden shingles. In the center of the hard clay floor burned great fires of dry wood whose thin acrid smoke escaped from openings in the roof, above the hearth or by the doors, windows and openings under the eaves of the thatch.

By the "hearthsmen" and visitors when not working or