A Homicide Near Hebron.

The fair name and enviable reputation of Marlboro county has once more been blackened overseer for Mr. J. C. Everett. by one man taking the life of another, in one of the quietest and most prosperious sections of the county. On Christmas eve night, near Clio, on the plantation of Mr. P. J. Smith, while the colored people were having a "birthday party" at the home of George Vining, an altercation took place between Georgo and Alex Parker, both colored, which resulted in the instant killing of Alex by George.

It seems that George is a man of many wives and Alex was living with George's daughter. The row began at the house the heart, killing drinking, and Presbyterian Church Corner Stone.

At the laying of the corner ston of the new Presbyterian church on the 19th Rev. Chas A. Jones, pastor of the Baptist church, made the opening prayer and Mr. G. A. Brown, the architect, declared the stone plumb and upright. The choir sang an appropriate song at the beginning, then Dr. McLeod, the pastor, deposited in the stone a copy of a paper giving a history of the Bennettsville Presbyterian church, a printed copy of one of Dr. McLeod's sermons, copy of the word of God, copy of catechism, names of the building committee, Elders and Deacons of the church, copy of the MARLBORO DEMOCRAT and some other articles.

The exercises were short but impressive, witnessed by several members of the church and friends cohe capital stock in the city. Benediction pronounced by Dr. McLeod.

Defeated Mail Order Forces.

MET BARGAIN WITH BARGAIN.

Combated the Catalogue-Persistent Sticking to the Line Brought Back His Former Patronage

One of the famous utterances of General Grant was, "I will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." Grant fought it out, though it took a long time, and won. He had mapped out his plan of campaign, and he hewed to the line. Business is pretty much like a battle. The man who succeeds must look a long way ahead, map out his plan of campaign, select the line along which he must fight and stick to I

In a New England town lives a merchant who some months ago found his patronage rapidly falling off because so many of his customers were buying goods by mail order. The inviting catalogue and the luring advertisements in the mail order periodicals had tempted them beyond resistance. Local trade was falling off with a rapidity that was startling. This particular merchant did not sit down and fold his hands, letting things go to smash without an effort to prevent. Ale did from Salters lately I will not run about the streets teating his few dots. All of the nair in the manner of ancient folks boys down here are well and crying, "Woe's me!" Not a bit

Instead, this merchant put on his thinking cap and resolved to combat the enemy. In the first place, he made tew days to his new home, one note of the sort of ammunition the enemy was using. The enemy always tries to find the ammunition that will do the most execution. The other side Mr. Cam McDaniel formerly of usually finds it advisable to use the Merlboro but recently of Berkely same kind of ammunition and shoot a little harder and straighter. This merchant was aware of these facts, and he turned them to account. Accordingly he began to use the same sort of ammunition, and lots of it. The ammunition was advertising. In the use of this ammunition the local merchant really had the advantage of Mrs D. P. McQuaige and daugh the city mall order enemy, for the latter Nellie, also Mrs L. M. Hamer, ter was doing his shooting at long range necessarily, while the home merchant did not have so far to shoot. He could use the local paper for his gun, take better aim and be surer of hitting the mark

So this live merchant thought out a plan of campaign and hewed to the line. When he saw a mail order All is quiet at Mr. H. A. Odom's bargain advertised in the catalogues In conclusion, I want to thank and the little weekly and monthly journals, the cheap affairs that are published only to carry mail order ads., he took a shot at it with an advertisement when George struck Alex with for a few weeks a dead paper, or in the home paper. He kept well ina heavy loaded hickory stick one that was not worth taking out formed of the enemy's operations by on the head. Alex went into of the postoffice. What you want reading the catalogues. Here and the yard, George picked up his is a correspondent at every post there he picked out the weak points in the enemy's line-bargain offers which he could meet himself with a bargain just as good or better-and gradually he got the local people so deeply interested in the struggle that they began to take sides.

Naturally they took sides with the home merchant, whom they knew personally. They began making more fre-
