

MANAGEMENT OF SCHOOLS.

WHY THERE SHOULD BE METHODS USED.

The Chief Characteristics of a Good Disciplinarian are Energy, Self-Control, Vigilance, Confidence, Etc.

Published by request.

School Management is that department of educational science which treats of the management and control of schools. The chief topics under school management are school requisites, school organization, school work, school ethics, school government, and the teacher. Space will not permit us to discuss each of these topics in this letter, therefore we invite your attention to a few suggestions upon the topic of school government.

School government is the administration of school affairs in such a manner as to secure proper discipline and promote the greatest welfare of the school. It does not differ materially from family government. The teacher takes the place of the parent and assumes for the time all the rights and responsibilities of that person. Its end is the same—the making of good citizens.

The following are the most important objects of school government, viz: 1. To preserve good order. 2. To train to self government. Order is necessary and must be secured, that the school work may be performed to the best advantage. Order does not necessarily mean absolute quiet. Quiet which is detrimental to a school may be produced by the enforcement of rigid penalties. Machinery in a well regulated manufactory is quite likely to produce a noise, so it is with the machinery in a well regulated school-room, but a certain degree of quiet and order must be observed. All of the different varieties of family government are represented in the school and the teacher who can harmonize all these, performs a great task. The power to govern well, to train pupils to self control, is the essential characteristic of every teacher, and without this ability no persons should engage in the work of teaching.

The chief characteristics of a good disciplinarian are energy, system, self-control, vigilance, confidence, culture, love, will-power, teaching-power and impartiality.

An industrious, energetic teacher finds little trouble in governing a school. The busy child is rarely troublesome. It is the idle one that is generally in mischief and occasions the teacher the most trouble. The pupils are quite likely to become imbued with the same spirit that the teacher has, so that if the teacher is energetic, the pupil, by association, is likely to become energetic. System is one of the greatest essentials to good government. The teacher, as well as the pupils, should perform all work systematically. Programs for recitations and for study should be formed and carefully followed out.

The teacher need not be a spy, but should ever be vigilant. It is easier to prevent any disorder than it is to quiet it. Some teachers act the part of a spy. This is wrong and will exert a baneful influence upon the pupils. "Actions speak louder than words," thence a teacher in order to teach his pupils self control must first be able to control himself. Self control enables the teacher to decide on all difficulties with promptness and certainty. A teacher who loses control of his temper will soon lose control of his pupils. It is the duty of the teacher to be patient even under the most trying ordeals of vexation and irritation. Patience will win the respect and love of even the most thoughtless and wayward. Where the grumbling teacher scatters grief and shadows, the cheerful teacher distributes joy and sunshine, and his pupils leave him at the end of the term showering blessings on him and thanking him for the work he has done for making them ladies and gentlemen.

A successful disciplinarian must have confidence in himself, in his pupils and in his work. The greatest injury that can be done a pupil is to lead him to believe that you think him unworthy of your confidence. A pupil who is thought by the teacher to be a rogue will generally act a rogue, but if he is trusted he will generally prove himself worthy of the trust. Teaching is the noblest avocation of man, and a person who does not believe it has no business in the school-room. The teacher must feel also that he is competent to perform the work which is placed before them. Pupils imitate their teachers. The teacher with unpolished boots and uncombed hair will have his imitators. If he lifts his hat to his pupils as he passes them, a good influence will be exerted not only upon his pupils but over the entire community.

Love is a ruling principle of discipline, and is one that ought to be possessed by every teacher. It should be the one great motive of our lives to make others happy. The teacher may accomplish this by offering a word of encouragement or sympathy, and by adding to their comfort in many other ways.

Impartiality is one of the most essential principles to good government. The teacher acts both as a legislator and as a judge and must be impartial in his dealing with every pupil. Justice to all should be the scales in which he weighs all of his decisions. The love and respect of his pupils and good discipline will be secured if such judgments are always rendered.

Firmness and kindness must be united. The teacher who at first refuses, then relent and at last consents, shows a weakness of will power which is conducive to poor government; but the teacher who finds himself in error should have enough stamina to acknowledge his mistake openly and frankly.

Poplar Items.

The health of the community is not very good at present.

The farmers are about through fixing tobacco beds.

The people of this place and also of near Nichols would be glad to see our supervisor get to the bridges near Nichols, as they are in bad shape, and it is getting time for us to go to hauling fertilizer; while the water is down, and that is the time to prepare the bridges. We hope that this will be attended to as soon as possible. If not, when the water gets up there will be no passing without a boat, and this won't do to haul fertilizers on.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown of Tabor, N. C., visited at the latter's parents last Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. Addie Shelly, of Green Sea, visited her sister at this place last Saturday.

The Inscrutable Bismarck.

Herbert Bismarck had none of his father's bright wit in conversation, but had his overbearing temper and his mother's violent irascibility. She had the disposition of the Frankish woman as exemplified in Fredegonda, but held in check by modern conditions. Bismarck in anger was as terrible as a ferocious mastiff. She, far from restraining him, kept on saying: "Good dog; tss-s-s-s. Go at him (or at her); good dog, tss-s-s-s," or tantamount words. The mastiff that lay below the surface in Bismarck grew more and more infuriated, especially if the evening before he had eaten and drunk copiously. With these parents, Herbert, Jane and Bill Bismarck could not be expected to have courteous manners. Herbert, who was no stranger in Paris and whom the fond father hoped one day to send there as ambassador, was bulky, sullen and of a complexion that revealed an angry state of the blood. Gambetta said of him, "He reminds me of a limb of the law hardened to the work of laying on executions—in short, of a low class bailiff (recors)."—London Truth.

The Machine Worker.

The American boy is thoroughly imbued with the get-rich-quick spirit, whether in a greater or lesser degree. The learning of a trade is too slow, too tedious and offers too little immediate inducement. Why should he work as an apprentice at 4 to 8 cents an hour after reaching the age of seven-teen or eighteen when he can earn 10 to 15 cents at piecework running a machine? Once he has entered the door of the piecework shop the boy is doomed to the pieceworker's life. Once the machine gets its grip upon him he never escapes. The rare exception only proves the rule. Not only does the monotony of the reduplicative work upon which he enters choke his ambition and devitalize his life, but usually he enters upon this narrow life work with very little equipment and a view bounded by a horizon equally narrow. There is little to develop, even when there is some ambition to begin with.—O. M. Becker in Engineering Magazine.

Seven in the Bible.

The number seven plays a prominent part in events in the Bible. The creation took six days, and on the seventh there was rest. On the seventh day of the seventh month a holy observance was ordained, and the Israelites feasted seven days and rested seven days. Noah had seven days' warning of the flood, and the seven years of plenty were foretold in Pharaoh's dream by seven fat beasts, as were the seven years by seven lean beasts. We speak of the seven heavens, and the seventh son was supposed to be endowed with pre-eminent wisdom. In short, there is no other number which enters into the Bible so often as seven. No doubt the wide popularity of the number and the superstitions which are connected with it came from its wide use in the Bible.

Woman's Opportunity.

Meeting a negro, a certain southern gentleman asked him how he was getting on. The negro assumed a troubled look and replied:

"Oh, so far's physicality goes I'm all right, but I sure do have ma troubles wif ma wife."

"Well, Sam, I'm sorry to hear that. What seems to be the matter?"

"She thinks money grows on trees, I reckon. All de time she keeps pestering me for pinch o' change. If it ain't a dollar it's half or a quarter she wants."

"What on earth does she do with the money?"

"I dunno. Ah! neva! give her none yet."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Pliny's Jewel Stories.

Pliny declares that a diamond was so hard that if placed on an anvil and struck with a sledge hammer it would give back a blow of such force as to shiver both anvil and hammer to pieces. Another of his wonderful tales states that "on the shore of the island of Cyprus there was a stone lion having eyes formed of emeralds, which shone so brightly that all the fishes were ingloriously frightened away. The fishermen accordingly pulled the emeralds out and put in glass eyes instead, whereupon the wise fishes became bolder and returned to their accustomed nets."

A Mean Insultation.

"Very gratifying!" said a young and conceited novelist. "A gentleman writes me that he took a copy of my last work to read during a railway journey, and as a result suddenly discovered he had gone twenty miles beyond his destination."

"Dear me," commented the young author's friend; "sleeping in trains is a bad habit!"

How It Was Done.

"Oh," remarked the first fox hunter, "you should have seen Mr. Nuritch take that high hedge!"

"You surprise me," exclaimed the other. "I thought the horse he rode wasn't much of a jumper."

"Oh, the horse didn't take the hedge; Mr. Nuritch did it alone."—Philadelphia Press.

The Facts.

The One—And you say this horse hasn't any faults? The Other—Not a single fault. The One—But he appears to be blind in his right eye. The Other—Well, that's not his fault; it's his misfortune.—Chicago News.

His Literary Bent.

"Father, when I leave school I am going to follow my literary bent and write for money."

"Triumph! My son, you ought to be successful. That's all you've done since you've been at school."
