Later when he came down here, the conviction became stronger that she was really my wife and that Mrs. Carpenter was not. "It is hard to explain such things to persons who do not understand the ways of heaven, and therefore we did not mention it to our congregation. I cannot understand how 1 made the mistake of the letters. I was in a hurry to get them mailed and placed Delia's letter in the wrong envelope. That is all there is to it. The recorder of deeds, however, had no right to keep the letter. "He should have sent it back to me without making it public and causing all this trouble and misapprehension. I have decided to so away from here, and that it is the best that I seperate from my wife. She agrees with me and I have advised her to try to get a divorce soon. She will probably continue here for a time, as the congregation has a high regard for her.' Carpenter declined to say where he was going or whether he intends to see Miss Goodrick. He also refused has taken from the back of the little to say where she is located at present. Mrs. Carpenter, whose grief is tempered somewhat by the fact that the blow has not been unexpected by her, said that she thought her husband's mind had been unbalanced for some time, or ever since Miss Goodrich had come to Harrington. She has known of the almost daily letters that he has sent to the young woman since she went away. She said the pastor would arise in the morning as early as five o'clock to write them and would hurry to the postoffice to get them off on the 6:30 train. Members of the congregation are amazed at the revelations. "He was one of the most magnetic men I ever met." declared one of them. "The congregation idolized him."
