YOUNG MEN'S BIBLE CLASS, OAKWOOD BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL

Agricultural Department Gets Over 50 Per Cent. Now

The past session has been the most successful Clemson College has ever experienced. Clemson is truly the farmers' college. More than 50 per cent of her 800 students are taking the agricultural course. This past session 418 men studied agriculture at this, the greatest agricultural college in the South. When these agricultural colleges were first established they were criticized by people in general because their students, especially their graduates, did not engage in farming. This criticism at the time was unjust because the country was demanding the services of these graduates in other and more important work. These demands came from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the agricultural colleges, the state experiment stations and other scientific institutions. While only a small percentage of the graduates of these colleges in the early days engaged in farming, it is a fact that the great majority of them have made excellent and substantial citizens and their influence has always been for good.

In the early '90's when most of the institutions were first established, agriculture over the entire country was greatly depressed on account of over-production. When cotton was selling for five and six cents a pound and the price of all agricultural products was correspondingly low, there was little inducement offered to the graduate of these institutions to enter the profession of farming. The over-production of farm products a few decades ago was due largely to the cheap lands of the west which at that time could produce crops with very little outlay of money.

Now that the country is filling up so rapidly with people, the demand for agricultural products is such that every young man well trained along agricultural lines can find valuable employment on the farm. In this age unless a man is highly trained to produce agricultural products economically, he is doomed to more or less failure. The time has passed when mediocrity meets with success on the farm. Keen competition means the banishment of ignorance for only the well informed can succeed. The world is demanding trained men who are capable of producing farm products economically.

Clemson college is now the best equipped institution in the south along agricultural lines, and the great movement for agricultural development that is sweeping our state can be indirectly traced to Clemson college. While Clemson encourages most of her students to go back to the farm, many, however, are advised to take post-graduate work at other institutions and to seek positions with the government and various experiment stations. There is a big and growing demand for well trained men in the various lines of scientific agriculture. Students taking the agricultural course at Clemson are not only given instruction in the art of agriculture, but are well trained in the fundamental sciences related thereto. Clemson offers a four-year course in scientific agriculture which embraces agronomy, animal husbandry, dairying, entomology, zoology, botany, bacteriology, horticulture, veterinary science, zoology, mineralogy, chemistry and forestry. This course is of course supplemented by work in mathematics, history and political economy. In the senior year students may elect major subjects.

SETTLEMENT IN SIGHT

The Kentucky Fire Insurance Warrantable to End. Louisville, Ky., June 10.—Settlement of the Kentucky Fire Insurance tangle, caused by the wholesale withdrawal from the state of foreign companies following enactment by the last legislature of the Glaz-Greene amendment to the Zorn law providing for more stringent state supervision and taxation of premiums, was predicted today as a result of conference here between Representatives of several large insurance companies and State officials.

A proposition submitted by the insurance companies, is declared by the members of the conference to be satisfactory to the State officials, except in a few details, and probably will receive official approval. Under this proposition the insurance companies agree to the principal state regulation and will return to the state at once. The state officials are to suspend operations of the new law and refrain from putting certain heavy expenses entailed by the law upon the companies. A test of the constitutionality of the measure will be made. A commission will be named to frame a new bill to be introduced at the next legislature to take the place of the Zorn law and the amendment. One of the three commissioners will be named by the Kentucky business organizations, another by the State Insurance board and the third by the insurance companies. The companies also agree to make certain reductions in rates in accordance with the order issued by the State rating board.

GAFFNEY HAS RAISED HALF NECESSARY SUM

Ed. DeCamp Says That Chances Are Good For His Town To Be Born In New Association

From Thursday's Daily. The Intelligencer learned last night from Ed H. DeCamp that half the sum necessary had been raised for Gaffney to enter the proposed Piedmont baseball league and that a just effort will be made to secure the remainder. Mr. DeCamp, who is one of the best known baseball enthusiasts in the State, says that he has been making every effort to get the money needed and that he has in hand a little over one-half the sum that Gaffney will have to have if he is to put a team into the field. The money has not entirely optimistic last night over the outlook but he believes that there is a fair chance of getting the money together today and says that he hopes to see Gaffney have a place in the league when the money is pitched next Monday.

When Greenwood dropped out of the league the matter was up to Mr. DeCamp and he has strained every nerve in his efforts to get the Gaffney team into the association. He has contributed liberally himself and if he will make one more effort today, it is believed that Gaffney will come across in the event that the money is raised. Gaffney will be able to put some sort of team into the field next Monday and this aggregation can then be strengthened within a few days.

Conditions in Anderson from a baseball standpoint are looking better every day. Mr. Gaffney announced last night that he has three teams of pitchers already in camp and is expecting another to arrive tomorrow. "Red" Childers, well known to the baseball fans of this section, has been signed and will report before the season opens. Red will play either on base or short stop. On the whole the Anderson baseball situation looks good and it is believed that they will be found playing in the high class some time this season. The first work-out for this season takes place this afternoon when Gaffney's bunch will report before the team will be pitched.
