—Hon. B. J. Johnston, who has represented this county in the lower house in former years, is announced for senator this week. Mr. Johnston, is a well-balanced, level-headed fellow and should be elected the county would have a senator of whom she could be proud.

—Married on the 17th instant, at the residence of bride's parents, Mr. Wm Williams of the Ducusville section to Miss Laura Masters of near Table Rock. A. L. Edens, Notary Public, officiating. The happy couple have the best wishes of their numerous friends.

—Honor W. Folger, our present county treasurer, announced this week his resignation to that office. He has no objection to our hands in the future of the county—they are in good hands and have the unwavering loyalty of the people who will be again able to have with confidence to discharge the duties of the office in that painstaking manner as characteristic of him.

—A paper three or four issues, will be published by the J. Thos. Folger Co., of Greenville, which is called the "Pickens Sale." Prices have been fixed for this stock and it will pay you to attend. The sale will continue for ten days and bargains can be picked up. This company never misrepresents, so you can rely on what you get being just as advertised.

—Maj. G. M. Lynch offers his services again to the county as Supervisor. He is a nice, affable gentleman, and a straight man, and has a clean record to show for his stewardship. Should he be elected again the affairs of the county would be in safe hands and the careful painstaking methods that has ever marked his walk through life would be carried into his work in the supervisor's office.

—John P. Smith, who has done all he could with the means at hand for the good of his county, again seeks the office of County Commissioner. John is all right and will meet every promise he has made the people, if they will give him time and he can get the convicts and scrape. The voters know him and know he will do the best he can. If he is elected he promises to be even more faithful to his trust in the future than he has been in the past.

—This paper is a representative sheet of the county, circulating in every town and corner, and candidates for the votes of ALL the people are making themselves an injustice by not coming out for office and announcing in this paper. It is not very long now, until the campaign opens, and so far, several offices have no aspirants. The office of auditor, probate judge and one county commissioner and one member of the House, makes four places that are not much sought after by the people. Come on out and let the voters know who you are and what office you want.

GREAT MUSIC.

The Mystical Influence It Wields Over Our Sensibilities.

Great music is a physical storm, agitating to unimaginable depth the mystery of the past within us—or we might say it is a prodigious incantation, every different instrument and voice making separate appeal to different billions of prenatal memories. There are tones that call up all the ghosts of youth and joy and tenderness; there are tones that evoke all phantom pain of perished passion; there are tones that resurrect all dead sensations of majesty and might and glory, all expired exultations, all forgotten magnanimities. Well may the influence of music seem inexplicable to the man who idly dreams that his life began less than a hundred years ago! But the mystery lightens for whoever learns that the substance of self is older than the sun. He finds that music is a necromancy; he feels that to every ripple of melody, to every billow of harmony, there answers within him out of the sea of death and birth some eddying immeasurable of ancient pleasure and pain.

Pleasure and pain! They commingle always in great music, and therefore it is that music can move us more profoundly than the voice of ocean or than any other voice can do. But in music's larger utterance it is ever the sorrow that makes the undertone, the surging matter of the sea of soul. Strange to think how vast the sum of joy and woe that must have been experienced before the sense of music could evolve in the brain of man!—Lafcadio Hearn.

The Stone Forests of Arizona.
The regions of the Little Colorado river in Arizona abound in wonderful vegetable petrifications, whole forests being found in some places which are hard as flint, but which look as if but recently stripped of their foliage. Some of these stone trees are standing just as natural as life, while others are piled across each other just like the fallen monarch of a real wood forest. Geologists say that these stone trees were once covered to the depth of a thousand feet with mud, which transformed them from wood to solid rock. This mud after the lapse of ages washed out, leaving some of the trees standing in an upright position. The majority of them, however, are piled helter skelter in all directions, thousands of cords being sometimes piled up on an acre of ground.

Obsolete Foods.
In Great Britain we have left off eating many wild creatures that formerly were accounted delicacies. For example, the young gulls—we mean the black-headed, inland nesting variety—used to be collected and sold for pies and puddings. There is still a tradition in favor of rook pie, but the number of rooks that come on the market is a decreasing quantity every year. Squirrel used to be eaten quite commonly too.—London Country Life.

L. ROTHSCHILD,

Greenville, S. C.

In the last issue of the Sentinel-Journal we called the attention of the readers of the expected change in our "ad" this week. Probably you have been expecting something but it is only a few words about chickens. The time, this season is passed when little chickens will bring fancy prices. In early spring most anything that can make a fuss like a frying chicken will sell for twice its value, but now most everybody has had a sample and are now looking for chickens that are fit to eat. So if you want good prices for your chickens through the glutted season let them grow. We are still in the business and will do our best as we have always done to hold up the price. Come to see us with your chickens and eggs and supply your wants from our well filled store at honest prices. Respectfully,
CRAIG BROS.
