CHAPTER IX.

Not the least of the causes which have brought Mexico to the brink of the abyss is the endless quarrel be tween church and state, which has almost destroyed the sanctity of marriage and left, besides, a pitiful heritage of deserted women and fatherless children as its toll.

Many an honest laborer has peoned himself to pay the priest for his mar-riage, only to be told that it is not legal in the eyes of the law; and many another, married by the judge, has been gravely informed by the padre that the woman is only his mistress, and the children born out of wedlock.

So that now, to be sure that she is wedded, a woman must be married twice, and many a couple, on account of the prohibitive fees, are never mar-

Cruz Mendez was no different from the men of his class, and he believed honestly that he was married to the comely Maria; but Hooker could have enlightened him on that point if he had cared to do it.

Bud was playing a game, with the Eagle Tail mine for a stake; and, being experienced at poker, he stood pat and studied his hand. Without doubt Mendez had lost his usefulness as a locator of the mine, since Maria was not his legal wife and could not sign the transfer papers as such. According to the law of the land, the woman now living with Aragon's mayordomo was the "legitimate" wife of the contract, and she alone could release title to the mine once Mendez denounced the claim.

But Mendez had not yet denounced the claim—though for a period of some thirty days yet he had the ex-clusive privilege of doing so—and Bud did not intend that he should.

Meanwhile they must walk softly, ieaving Aragon to still hug the delu-sion that he would soon, through his mayordomo, have them in his power—and when the full sixty cays of Cruz Mendez's mining permit had expired they could locate the mine again.

But how-and through whom? That was the question that Bud was studying upon when Phil rode up the trail, and in his abstraction he barely re-

"Well, cheer up, old top!" cried De-Lancey, throwing his bridle-reins to the ground and striding up to the tent. "What ho, let down the portcullis, me lord seneschal! And cease your vain repining, Algernon—our papers are all O. K. and the lawyer says to go shead. But that isn't half the news! Say, we had a dance up at the hotel last night and I met-"

"Yes-sure you did," broke in Bud; "but listen to this!". And he told him of El Tuerto's matrimonial entangle-

De Lancey, leaping up at the finish.
"Oyex!" Mendex!"

"Don't say a word," warned Bud, springing to the tent door to intercept him, "or you'll put us out of business! It is nothing," he continued in Spanish as Mendes came out of his house, "but put Don Felipe's borse in the corrai

"St, senor with great pleasure!" smirked blender, running to get the horse, and after he had departed Bud turned back and shook his head.

"We can't afford to quarrel with Mr. Mendez," he said; "because if Aragon ever gets hold of him we're ditched. Jest let everything run on like we'd overlooked something until the sixty days are up—then, if we get away with it, we'll locate the mine our Yes; but how?" "Well, they's two ways," returned Bud; "either hunt up another Mexican citizen or turn Mexican ourselves." "Turn Mexican!" shrilled Phil, and then he broke down and laughed. "Well, you're a great one, Bud," he chortled; "you sure are!"

"I come down here to get this mine," said Bud laconically.

Yes, but you're a Texan-or was

"That makes no difference" in swered Bud stoutly. "The hot weather is coming on revolution is likely to begin any time—and there ain't a sin-gle Maxion we can trust. Jest one more break now and we lose out—now how about let?

"Who's going to turn Mexican ?" estioned De Lancey, "you or me?" Well—I will, then!"

"No, you won't, sither!" cried Phil, torresting his canny, shrewdness. "I'll do it myself! I'm bail lighten already. I've been eating chill so long!" "Now here," begun sud, "inten to me. I've been thinking this over all man that turns Mexican is likely to get-mixed up with the authorities and have to skip the country, but the other feller is in the other way-he's got to stay with the works till hell freezes

"Now you're an engineer and you know how to open up a mine-I don't. So, if you say so, I'll take out the pa-pers and you hold the mine—or if you want to you can turn Mex."

"Wel!," said De Lancey, his voice suddenly becoming soft and pensive, "I might as well tell you, Bud. that I'm thinking of settling in this country, anyway. Of course, I don't look at Aragon the way you do-I think you are prejudiced and misjudge him -but ever since I've known Gracia

"Gracia!" repeated Bud: and then. stirred by some great and unreasoning anger, he rose up and threw down hie hat pettishly. "I'd think, Phil." he muttered, "you'd be satisfied with all the other girls in the world without-

"Now here!" shouted Phil, rising as unreasoningly to his feet, "don't you say another word against that girl, or

"Shut your mouth, you little shrimp!" bellowed Bud, wheeling upon him menacingly. "You seem to think you're the only man in the world

"Ob, slush, Bud!" cried Phil in disgust, "you don't mean to tell me you're in love with Gracia the!"

"Who-me?" demanded Hooker, his face suddenly becoming fixed and masklike; and then he laughed hoarse ly in derision and sank down on the

Certainly, of the two of them, he was the more surprised at his sudden ; outbreak of passion; and yet when the words were spoken he was quick to know that they were true.

Undoubtedly, in his own way, he was in love but he would never admIt it, that he knew, too. So he sank down on the blankets and swore harshly, while De Lancey stared at him in unfeigned surprise.

"Well, then," he went on, taking Bud's answer for granted, "what're you making such a row about? Can't go to a dance, with a girl without you jumping down my throat?"

"W'y, sure you can!" rumbled Bud, said: now hot with a new indignation; "but after getting me to go into this deal against my will and swearing me to some damn fool pledge, the first thing you do is to make friends with Aragon and then make love to his daughter. Is that your idea of helping things along D'ye think that's the way a pardner ought to act? No. I tell you, it is not!"

plaintively, "what's the matter with you? Be reasonable, old man; I never meant to hurt your feelings!"

"Hurt my feelings!" echoed Hooker scornfully. "Huh, what are we down here for, anyway-a Sunday school picnic? My feelings are nothing, and they can wait; but we're sitting on a mine that's worth a million dollars mebbe-and it ain't ours; either-and when you throw in with old Aragon and go to making love to his daughter you know you're not doing right! That's all there is to it-you're doing me and Kruger dirt!"

"Well; Bud, said De Lancey with mock gravity, "If that's the way you feel about it I won't do it any more!"

She Gave Me Her Hand and Away We Went

I wish you wouldn't," breathed Bud, religing his head from his hands; the sure was out. Phil, worrying shout it."

"Well, then, I won't do it." protested well, then, I won't do it," protested Phil sincerely. "So that's settled—now who's soing to turn Mexican citizen?" "Sult yourself," said Bud listlessly, "Til match you for it!" proposed De Lancer, diving into his porket for

"Dun't need to," responded Bud; "you can do what you please." "No; I'll match you!" persisted Phil.

"No; I'll match you!" persisted Phil,
"That was the agreement—whenever it was an even break we'd let the money talk. Here's your quarter—and if I match you I'll become the Mexican clilen. All set? Let 'er go!"

He disped the coin into the sir and caught it in his hand,
"Heada!" he culled, without looking at it. "What you got?"

"Heads!" answered Bud, and Phil
chucked his money into the air again and laughed as it dropped into his paint.

"Heafs she is figain!" he cried, showing the Mexican eagle: "I never did see the time when I couldn't match, you, anyway. So now, old socks, you can keep right on being a Texan and day and you jest heard about it. The hating Mexicans like horny toads, and I'll denounce the Eagle Tail the minute the time is up. And I won't go near the Aragon outfit unless you're with me—is that a go? All right, shake hands on it, pard! I wouldn't quarrel with you for anything!"

"Aw, that's all right," mumbled Bud, rising and holding out his hand. "I knowed you didn't mean nothing." He sat down again after that and gazed drearly out the door.

"Say, Bud," began Phil, his ayes sparkling with amusement, "I've got something to tell you about that dance last night. If I didn't put the crusher on Mr. Fells Luna and Manuel uel Rey! Wow! I sure wished you were there to see me do it!

"This Felix Luna is the son of an old sugar planter down in the hot country somewhere. He got run out by the revoltose and now he's up here trying to make a winning with Gracia Aragon—uniting two noble families. conceited, swelled-up little squirts you ever saw in your life he's the limit, and yet the old man kind of favors

"But this Manuel del Rey is the captain of the rurales around here and a genuine Mexican fire-eater—all buck skin and fierce mustachies, and smells like chill peppers and garlic-and the two of 'em were having it back and forth as to who got the next dance with Gracia.

"Well, you know how it is at a Mexican dance—everybody is supposed to be introduced to everybody else—and when I saw those two young turkey-cocks talking with their hands and eyebrows and everybody else backing off, I stepped in close and looked at

"And she's some girl, too, believe me! The biggest brown eyes you ever saw in your life, a complexion like cream, and hair—well, there never was such hair! She was fanning herself real slow, and in the language of the fan that means: "This don't interest me a bit!' So, just to show her I was wise, I pulled out my handkerchief and dropped it on the floor, and when she saw me she stopped and began to count the ribs in her fan. That was my cue—it meant she wanted to speak with me so I stepped up and

"Excuse me, senorita, but while the gentlemen talk-and if the senora, your mother, will permit-perhaps we

"And say, Bud, you should have seen the way she rose to it. The girl is a sport, believe me, and the idea of those two novios chewing the rag while she sat out the dance didn't appeal to her at all. So she gave me her hand and away we went, with all the old ladies talking behind their fans and Manuel del Rey blowing up like a volcano in a bunch of carambas or worse. Gee, it was great, and she could dance like

"But here's the interesting part of it—what do you think she asked me, after we'd had our little daugh? Well, you don't need to get so grouchy about t—she asked about you!"

"AwI" "Yes, she did! So you see what you get for throwing her down!"

What did she ask?" "Well, she asked"—here he stopped and laughed—"she asked if you were a cowboy! "No!" cried Bud, pleased in spite of himself; "what does she know about cowboys?" "Ob, she's wise!" declared Phil; "she's been to school twice in Los Angeles and seen the wild west show. Yes, sir, she's just like an American girl and speaks English perfectly. She told me she didn't like the Mexican nen-they were too stuck on themselves and say, Bud, when I told her you were a genuine Texas cowboy, what do you think she said?" "Wy, I don't know," answered Bud, smiling broadly in anticipation; "what

"She said she'd like to know you!" "She did not!" came back Bud with sudden spirit.

Then he laughed the thought away, a great burden seemed to be lifted from his heart, and he found himself. happy again.

Lethbridge, Alberta, June 20.—The odies of 94 of the 197 miners en tombed when an explosion yesterday No. 20. of the Hill Crest, Alberta, Colleries, Amited, tonight had been brought to the surface. All hope of rescuing all any of the remaining 103 members. the crew that entered thme yesterds been abandoned. Under the discovernment expects, the work of a went rapidly forware today and at nightfall the rescuers had reached a point several hundred feet into the mine. The work was retarded somewhat by a fire that broke out today, but was only temporarily delayed. That the explo-sion was due to the forming of gases in the lower levels of the mine, has been generally accepted.

Investigation preliminary to the formal opening of the inquiry into the cause of the disaster has been started by government officials.

Practically the entire male popula-tion of the little mining camp was wiped out by disaster.

New York Cotton

New York, June 20 .- There was further sharp treek in the cotton market today with December con-tracts selling off to 1243, or $3.35 per hale below the high record of June 1. Favorable weather, improving, to inspire the seiling movement, which was active and more or less general Closing prices were barely steady and from 8 to 15 points net lower. The opening was steady at a decline of 3 to 6 points in sympathy with laverpool and in response to overnight buying orders. There was a good de-mand at the decline and prices rallied a few points rise after the call The selling, however, seemed to be more urgent with bears more confi-dent than at any previous time since soon became weak and unsettled.

Rallies of 7 or 8 points occurred after a break of some 10 to 17 points but were not maintained and last prices were the lowest of the day on new crop deliveries. Leading spot interests were again good buyers of July, but offerings of that position were heavier and the price broke to 1360.

The selling here was doubtless promoted by the favorable weather look for over Sunday.

Stocks and Bonds

New York, June 20.—The Rock Is-land reorganization plan, announced after the close of business Friday, which, if carried to truit premises to be the most complete financial over-hauling ever projected in the annals of American hallways, again domi-nated business togaf on the stock exchange. The securities of the original or operating company which are clearly to benefit vider the terms of the new plan, male material gains, while the common and preferred s'azes of the Rock Island Cempany, one of the two holding companies which are to be wiped out, fell to new low records. In the dual dealings, the list under the lead of Union Pacific and United States Steel, advanced to the highest level of the week. Trading, howev-or, mainly represented the usual weekly settlement of contracts.

Sentiment was inclined towards gro-ater cheerfulness, despite indication of further delay in the handing down of the freight rate decision, the new angle in the Mexican situation and trade reports of an adverse character. London and the continent offered little comfort to this market, former inclining to irregularity with weakness and hostation at Paris and Berlin. Private advices from Paris offered no definite hope of an abatement in the gold demand from this center.

The drain of gold from this port was again reflected in the weekly bank statement, which showed an actual cash loss of about $8,000,000, due entirely to that movement.

The bond market was steady with total sales, par value, of $1,590,000. Government bonds were unchanged on call during the week.

New Orleans Cotton

New Orleans, June 20 .- Softness developed in the cotton market on the week end session and prices were sent down to new low levels for the week and the present downward movement. Selling orders came from both sides of the market and were tised partly on pessimistic trade accounts from foreign mill cen-ters and partly on the continued improvement in reports from the cotton belt. At the lowest of the day July was tations, while the new crops were it under. The close was steady at a loss of 9 to 10 points. Closing futures: July 1305; August 1297; October 1241; December 1240; January 1241; Spot cotton quiet, unchanged; middling 13 13-16, cales on the spot 310 to arrive 110.

Gold decreased 112,400. Currency and bank notes increased

Total deposits increased 517,500.

There were two games of ball played in the city yesterday, both being very one sided. Brogon and Gluck crossed bats at the Gluck Mill with a final score of 7 to 0 in favor of Gluck. The other game being at Bucha Vista park, between Belton and Toxaway, the score being 9 to 0 in favor of Belton. There was little interest in either game on account of the apparent one sidedness of each.
