

"THE KING OF THE BOLO ISLANDS"

Presented by SIG REINFIELD MUSICAL COMEDY COMPANY, at THE PALMETTO TODAY

The plot is laid in Paris and carries a thrill with every change in the scene. A stranded theatrical manager pulls off some stunts that are very ingenious. MR. DORMAN featured as King of the Islands, ISABEL as Madame FE FE and H. A. SULLIVAN as LEADING MAN in this unique act.

YOU ---

Don't know what you will miss if you fail to see the King of Bolo Islands. Ask your friends how they liked the show at the Palmetto last night.

THE TOLL
THE EPIDEMIC
BY PARCEL POST

IN MOVIES

2 reel feature
Comedy
Comedy

VITAGRAPH
ESSANAY
EDISON

SHERLOCK HOLMES Wasn't Out, But All of His Friends Were :: The Coolest Place in Anderson

SHERLOCK HOLMES, JR. IS STILL AT LARGE

SCARF PIN ON DISPLAY AT T. L. CELY CO. HE PAYS ANOTHER VISIT TO COCA-COLA PLANT.

Man of Mystery Can't Stay Away From College Heights--Thinks He Will Build Out There.

A young fellow at a cigar counter sold me a rotten cigar and then told me how to catch Sherlock. I didn't thank him then, but I do now. And whenever I decide to catch myself I shall act upon his advice.

By jove, but this weather brings them out! What? Women, of course for what do men amount to anyway? Descriptions? My pen falls me. Worth, Drexell, Lacroix, Hondeau, Callot and Gaqui are all represented. At least they are supposed to be and in the long run, what's the difference anyway. I don't know what the occasion was, but they were in a bunch yesterday afternoon headed for North Anderson.

I never make a promise, unless I live up to it, consequently I am making none now, but unless all signs fail I am going to pull off a little stunt at the Bijou theatre one night this week that will make your knees buggy. Not even the manager of this play house knows about it. I am going to keep it all to myself and try to unbottle it one night this week. I make no promises, but I am going to try and that is all a fellow can do there is a reward of $25 up for his capture. The bill tonight is a corker and it would take a Gatling gun to keep me away. The Norene St. Clair Stock Co., is "the biggest little show ever organized."

Do you know that whenever I buy a thing that is guaranteed, it makes me feel better, provided the guarantee is backed by a firm that will make good on it. That is one reason you can always feel safe when you buy from the Anderson Hardware Co., everything they sell is backed up by their guarantee. Right at this time they are there with Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co.'s line of enameled tubs, lavatories and sinks—in fact, the entire bath room outfit. An up-to-date bath room is one of the essentials to a modern home these days. The firm will do the work right and at a price that will make him worth while to turn the job over to them. You can't afford to take chances on this important feature of your home. Let the Anderson Hardware Co., do your plumbing and it will be done right.

So douced cute I don't see how they live. They were on their way to the depot yesterday morning and when they spoke to Mr. Todd he seemed so tickled that he almost ran over me before I could get out of his way. Don't blame him. But speaking of the girls, by jove, I thought Louisville, Ky., had the world beat, but fade away Louisville, for it's Anderson for mine. This town has you beat a city block.

But wait just a minute. While I am telling you beautiful bunch of perfections how pretty you are, I want to tell you about the finest line of furniture I ever laid my eyes on. Not only in the G. F. Tully and Sons furniture store the largest in the state, but they have the best assortment of furniture and household furnishings in the entire Piedmont section. The four stories of this big establishment are chock full of goods and they can fill your order for furnishing a 50 room hotel as easily as a six-room bungalow. By buying in carload lots this firm can make prices that keeps a lot of money here that would go out of Anderson. In other words they make it pay the home people to buy at home.

I'll bet a dollar and a half that the boy that opened box 222 yesterday morning at the postoffice didn't see me standing by his side.

I walked out again yesterday to College Heights. I had a thrill when I stood on the lot I have picked out to build on. Really, the more I see of College Heights, the better I can appreciate the location.

In addition to being close to the Anderson Female college it is surrounded by the most exclusive residential section of the city and just far enough out to make it in every way the most desirable property to be had.

The character of the homes already built contiguous to this property has stamped College Heights as the better home site. The Frank and DeCamps Realty Co., I am told, have the sales agency for this property. My advice to those who want a good investment is to buy now while the prices are reasonable.

Automobile No. 68 passed me at about 5:40 yesterday afternoon on the square. A lady and gentleman were on the front seat.

If there is any one thing in this world of ours that I do like to do it is to help my fellow man. That is one reason that I am going to put my approval on some splendid work that Dr. Campbell is doing to help the school children of this city and county correct defective vision. We owe it to the youth of Anderson county to give them every advantage that will make them proficient in their studies. Dr. Campbell has gone to a great expense to furnish the schools with a vision chart with instructions thereon which will enable the teachers to determine whether or not the child has a defective vision. The county and city superintendents have endorsed the chart and appreciate the importance of correcting the handicap in a child at schools. Practically all the northern and the western schools have adopted this idea and I am glad to see the south falling in line with this important work.

I understand a certain jolly bunch had me spotted yesterday afternoon and they are laying for me. Alright, fellows, come on in, the water is fine.

Well, Mr. Ramer, I put one over down your way yesterday. I deliberately walked into your plant and made another tour of inspection. You certainly have a jam-up bottling plant and to be perfectly honest about it, I have never seen a better equipped Coca-Cola plant anywhere. Your system of washing and sterilizing the bottles makes it impossible for a germ to live either on the inside or outside of a bottle. It is no wonder your product has such a tremendous sale here. I can easily see that your system is not how cheap you make it, but how good.

You don't have to hit me over the head with a gas pipe to get it into my thinker why Dugan, the paint man, has built up the largest exclusive paint house in this section of the country. People this day and time are not giving up their money for anything useless, they know that it is the best that money will buy—I mean, of course those people who consider quality. Dugan is an expert in his line and his trade realizes that it pays to buy from a man who knows that the only article worth handling is the one that will stand up under the eye of an expert. It must be good if the Anderson Paint and Color Company sells it.

I understand that some people are under the impression that my picture now on deposit at the Bank of Anderson can be seen anytime. This is a mistake. My photograph is under seal there and will not be displayed until the contest closes. You can't see my picture just yet, but this reminds me that you will find the men behind the Bank of Anderson not only financiers that know their business, but men who take pleasure in giving to their patrons advice on any financial matter. This accounts for the large patronage they enjoy both in and out of the city. Man may not be able to make the sun stand still, but he has summoned all the power of the very lightning and made it turn night into day, banishing the darkness, which was the terror of the cities a hundred years ago. Your beautifully lighted streets are wonderful to me for a town of this size. They make me feel that the people of Anderson are a few steps ahead of other cities with twice her population.

I find the Southern Public Utilities Co., are encouraging the business man as well as the home to use more light by making a very low rate. I understand they voluntarily lowered their rate again July 1. I find their policy is to keep ahead of the progress of the city. This is going to be a very big factor in the upbuilding of your city. A number of cities I have visited recently where the plants were municipally owned are doing just the reverse. They were holding back improvements and only giving them to the people where they were demanded and they then didn't always meet the demands, as the money was not available. I believe the franchise the company has here necessitates their keeping abreast of the needs of your town.

Some class, too, she was a blonde, dressed in white, cool pink hat and sash to match. Do you remember me young lady? We passed each other yesterday afternoon at 5:45 on the square.

Somehow when a thing gets into my thinker, it just bubbles out anyway. Now, I just must tell you why I selected the T. L. Cely Co., as headquarters. I am as foolish as a woman when it comes to good looking clothes and the minute I put my foot inside of Cely's, I knew I was in the shop where style held sway. You can walk up and down the streets of little old New York and you won't find anything on the T. L. Cely Co., when it comes down to quality and the last word in styles. If you want a suit that will look right, feel right and wear right, then go down there and let them measure you up for a nifty-tifty nobby fall suit. Prices? Well, when you find out the price, your pocket book will just hop right out of your pocket and open itself.

Remember the scarf pin is on display there. This is the best tip yet to my identity. Take a look at it.

Two young fellows were standing in the doorway at Cely's about 5:30 yesterday afternoon—One wore a cap; I think they were discussing me.

Do you know the phrase, well, here it is for the last time. Get the last issue of this paper and walk up to the man whom you suspect of being the right man and the contest is on. You get the $25.

You are the mysterious Sherlock Holmes, Jr., of the Anderson Daily Intelligencer.

You must follow the rules of the game or nothing doing. The hours today are from 3 to 6 P. M., and any time during the afternoon or night while visiting the Bijou theatre. This is the only place of amusement I will visit while here.

With best wishes.

Yours truly,
SHERLOCK HOLMES, JR.

CITROLAX

Users say it is the ideal, perfect laxative drink. M. J. Perkins, Green Bay, Wis., says "I have used pills, oils, salts, etc., but were all disagreeable and unsatisfactory. In Citrolax I have found the ideal laxative drink." For sick headache, sour stomach, lazy liver, congested bowels—it is the perfect laxative and gives a thorough flush. Sensitive, delicate people, invalids and children find it easy to take and pleasant in action. Results thoroughly satisfactory. Evans' Pharmacy, agents.

REVIEW OF THE STRIKE

(By Associated Press.)

Denver, Col., Sept. 7.—The Colorado coal miners' strike was called September 23, 1913. The number of strikers was estimated at 2,500 by the operators and 11,000 by the union officials.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Denver, Col., Sept. 7.—The Colorado coal miners' strike was called September 23, 1913. The number of strikers was estimated at 2,500 by the operators and 11,000 by the union officials.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the militia had been sent home, beginning with the battle of Ludlow between strikers and state troops on April 20, and continuing until President Wilson ordered federal troops to the scene. They arrived April 30. Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed in the disorders and the known list of wounded number 48. Since the arrival of federal soldiers quiet has prevailed.

Almost from the beginning the strike was marked by intermittent disorders until late October, Governor Ammons sent the national guard into the strike districts. The climax of these disorders after most of the