World Authority on Marketing of Grain

WILL MEET WITH LOCAL BUSINESS MEN ON THURSDAY NIGHT

COMES WITH PROF. LONG

Dr. Duvel of the Department of Agriculture Will Discuss Plans for Marketing of Grain Crop

Dr. J. W. T. Duvel, of the department of agriculture, Washington, one of the greatest authorities in the country on the preparation of grain for marketing, will be in Anderson Thursday night, in company with Prof. W. W. Long of Clemson College.

A telegram received yesterday by the chamber of commerce from Prof. Long says: "Dr. Duvel, one of the greatest authorities in the country on the preparation of grain for marketing will come with me to Anderson Thursday night from Greenwood."

The exact hour at which Prof. Long and Dr. Duvel will appear at the chamber of commerce will be announced later, and the business men generally of the city are urged to come out and meet this authority on the subject of marketing grain.

In an article in last Sunday's issue of The Intelligencer a letter from Prof. Long to the commercial organizations of the State calling their attention to the necessity for a movement to bring about better intra-state rates on grain in this State was printed.

The letter from Prof. Long with reference to both the necessity for lower intra-state grain rates and the coming of Dr. Duvel is reprinted below for the benefit of those who did not read it in a recent issue of this paper. The letter is as follows:

"I am sending you a copy of the report of the railroad officials made to the honorable railroad commission as to changes in the freight rates for inter-state shipments. These rates are very favorable and make it possible for us to handle successfully the shipments of grain out of the State."

"It is very necessary, however, that we have favorable intra-state rates in order that we may build up our local markets. To that end I am enclosing a copy of a petition that you can make any changes in that you may see fit, which you will please have signed by as many prominent business men as possible and send to the commission at an early date. We can reasonably expect that the railroad commission will reduce the intra-state rates as I am told by experts that the fare out of all regions."

"I would like to know what arrangements you can make to handle grain in your town if we are successful in securing favorable intra-state rates. This is a matter that your body should take up and work out at a very early date."

Tom, however, stubbornly persists in following the downward path.

and her father discover the theft. Filled with fury, Mr. Holliday orders his son from home. Mae informs her sweetheart of the turn of events, beseeching him to break Flo's influence over Tom.

Sands prepares to show Tom that he has been a mere dope for Flo. He drops a note when the boy is sure to find it. When Tom reads the note, he learns that Sands is to meet the dance hall girl at her home that afternoon at four. Flo effusively greets the gambler when the latter appears at the hour named. A short distance down the street, Tom and Mae observe Sands enter the woman's house.

Mae, broken-hearted, returns home. Tom is filled with a jealous rage and determines to settle matters with Sands. The gambler acknowledges to the good-for-nothing that Flo is his sweetheart, hoping thereby to cure the boy of his infatuation. Tom, however, stumbles the gambler by declaring that Mae had seen him enter the house. Sands hastens after Mae, only to be refused a chance to explain.

Flo, blaming Sands' sudden departure upon Tom, drives him from her presence. Mae finally learns the state of affairs. She promises to wed Sands upon the condition that he gives up gambling. The man announces that he is through with gambling forever.

After their marriage, Sands and Mae purchase a ranch. Tom drifts lower down the scale. Mae, without her husband's knowledge, supplies the wretch with money. Sands discovers his wife handing Tom a bill. He snatches the money and offers the boy a job. Tom refuses the position. Sands gives him money, but warns him never to return. The boy, at the end of his resources, holds up a stage coach. Sheriff Bennett goes in pursuit of the robber, who takes refuge in Sands' home. Sands is inclined to surrender him, but heeding Mae's pleas, consents to save him.

The posse besiege the building. A bullet strikes Tom, wounding him. When the sheriff enters the building, Sands offers to gamble with him for the boy. Bennett's cupidity causes him to consent. The cards are cut. Sands utters a cry of exultation—he has won. Approaching Tom, he places his hand upon the boy's shoulder, but Tom has gone to face his Maker.

PARAMOUNT THEATRE TODAY

Marguerite Clark in "The Goose Girl" A Romance Idyll

"The most beautiful idyllic romance ever produced for the screen" is not too enthusiastic a description for Marguerite Clark's famous novel, "The Goose Girl," with dainty Marguerite Clark in the title role. The work was so obviously suited to Miss Clark's charm and personality that the Lasky company made arrangements to present her in this one offering by the special courtesy of the Famous Players Film Company.

Of course Gretchen, the Goose Girl, is not a goose girl at all but the Princess of Ehrenstein, only child of the Grand Duke of that country, and has been stolen by gypsies in her infancy. This is all due to a plot conceived and executed by Von Herbeck, the chancellor to the Grand Duke, who seeks to put his own daughter in the place of the stolen Princess.

There is a king in the story, and he is the ruler of the neighboring country of Jugendheit. In order to prevent war between the two principalities, he is betrothed to marry the false Princess (Von Herbeck's daughter) whom he has never seen. But the king is young and romantic, and revolts at this procedure. In this event that follows the king rescues the little Goose Girl from insult and falls in love with her. However, it appears that it is impossible for him to marry a peasant girl, and he finally consents to marry the Princess after all. But—by that time the little Goose Girl has been identified as the real sister of royalty, and in the Princess of Ehrenstein the King of Jugendheit finds to his surprise and joy, the woman of his choice.

Miss Clark assumes the role of the little Princess whose lot it is to tend the geese of peasant foster-parents. Monroe Salisbury appears as the frank, democratic and warm-hearted king. Other leading members of the company are Sidney Dean, E. N. Dunbar, James Neil, L. Fayten, P. E. Peters, H. B. C. Carpenter, Ernest Jay, J. M. Casady, Miss Johnson and Lane Darwell. "The Goose Girl" is produced by the Lasky Company through an arrangement with the publishers of the book, The Bobbs-Merrill company.
