FOR THE SURVIVORS.

The old soldiers of the State will doubtless be delighted with the generosity of the last legislature, which made the largest appropriation ever made for pensions in South Carolina. The checks for this amount has been mailed to the survivors of the "thin grey line" and there will be many little needs and wants supplied by "my pension money." This year especially will the stipend come in handy and will be worth much to the old fellows. It would be fine if the State could afford to make this enough to support in comfort every one of the old boys, but that would be too much to expect yet. The time is coming, however, when the line gets a little thinner that we shall be able to do this and we feel sure that there will be no more joyful task than this for the young men who desire to honor their patriotic wearers of the grey in the '60's. There are 498 of the old soldiers to receive pensions in this county, and the total amount for Anderson will be $16,375.

RECORD WHEAT YIELD.

There shall be bread and to spare, according to the yield of wheat which is looked forward to this year. The government crop report will be issued today, and will doubtless show the largest yield of wheat ever made in the United States. The western wheat fields have shown an increase in acreage of over 4,000,000 acres, and the eastern section about as large proportionately. The estimated yield for this year, based upon the average yield for the last ten years, is 14 bushels per acre. Last year, however, the yield was 19 bushels per acre, and this amount may be duplicated. So the wheat crop this year may reach 700,000,000 bushels, and will be the largest by far the country has ever grown. The Intelligencer is glad to know that the Piedmont section of South Carolina has awakened to the possibility of growing wheat, and that the crop this year in this section will also be the largest ever grown.

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

Greenwood County has a "live" farm demonstration agent, and one which is making the people of that county "sit up and take notice." He is progressive and hard working, and in addition to a large corn club for the boys, and a big number of demonstrators among the grown-ups, he has started a correspondence course in agriculture. This course is for the boys of the country schools, and he has 115 pupils enrolled from 15 schools. The first lesson will be mailed out April 12, and will continue for the balance of the year. The Greenwood Journal has the following to say as to this work:

The course will extend through a period of ten months or a year and will include the summer vacation. The work will be done at home, and the help of the parents will be permissible. A lesson sheet or information sheet will be sent to each pupil on Monday of every other week and will be accompanied by a question sheet, which will be filled out and returned by the pupils on the following Monday.

The information or lesson sheet will be left in the hands of the pupil to be used later on. An extra review sheet will be sent at the end of each quarter, reviewing the work covered during that period of time. Each pupil will be graded as to his work and a careful file made of each lesson. Certificates may be awarded at the close of the course.

SANITARY STABLES.

The Intelligencer is informed that the city board of health is probably unanimously opposed to the proposition put forth by the city council to build the proposed new city barns in the heart of the city, and favors the construction of these in the suburbs of the city, or at least away from the business district.

If Anderson is ever to make a proper start along modern hygienic lines, seeking really to do away with the major causes of flies, and other insects, which spread disease, the city council should support the effort seeking to erect these barns away from the business district, and where the least possible harm will occur as a result of their location.

The matter will doubtless shortly be brought to the attention of the council by official action of the board of health, and sound hygienic policy, as well as wise business principles will doubtless dictate the adoption of the policy desired by the health officials or the erection of a sanitary barn and stables.

It may be argued that other stables are located as near the business district, and that to remove these would be to work a hardship not to be tolerated. In the event that this view is taken, and we would not combat it then the city should build a sanitary barn, and stables as a model for the others to follow.

FAYETTEVILLE ADOPTS IT.

The Intelligencer has a number of times commented upon the enlargement of the local chamber of commerce so as to include members from the entire county. In other words to put into effect the "Trenton Idea," which is spreading rapidly in other progressive communities. This "Trenton Idea" simply means the elimination of the imaginary line or boundary between the city and the country, and treating every member of the club as if he were a citizen of the community. It enlarges the community by embracing miles instead of blocks, and does away with the visionary difference between the man who lives in the city and the man who lives in the country.

Recently this idea struck Fayetteville, N. C., and the chamber of commerce invited the farmers of the surrounding country to come in and be members. The Charlotte Observer has the following to say about this progressive step:

Fayetteville has what is commonly termed a "live" chamber of commerce, and the latest idea of this organization for broadening its field of usefulness is to open its membership roll to farmers of the surrounding country and to invite them in. Some time ago it made farmers eligible and has a number of rural members, but wants an increase in this class. In an article in The Fayetteville Observer a call is made for 174 "good men and true, to send in their applications by rural carrier. The reason for wanting this particular number at this particular time, is that it would "round out the membership to a total 500." Asking and answering the question as to just why the gentlemen who live in the country should accommodate the chamber of commerce, The Observer says for exactly the same reason that the 326 have already joined—because they can help themselves and others by so doing. The modern farmer is just as much a business man as anybody else. He buys his supplies, sells his crop and banks his money in town. All the currents of business affect his welfare. It is as much a part of successful farming to look after the markets for supplies, crops and money as to see to the sowing and reaping. The country gentleman is simply standing in his own light when he lets his market town shift for itself.

"It would take quite a remarkable man to tell the exact difference between town and country anyway," says The Observer. "Some of Fayetteville's leading business men live outside the city limits, and that is so of nearly every other town. As Henderson's charter was drawn the limits were set just 1,600 feet in every direction from a stake in the middle of the town. The clerk that copied that bill wrote it 1,600 miles, and every farmer in Cumberland County lived in the town of Henderson without knowing it."

It is true, as The Observer says, that "town and county make one community that may prosper together or suffer apart. The choice is up to all inhabitants. The measure of prosperity depends on the measure of co-operation." It is a wonder the Fayetteville idea had not been born earlier and had a wider spread. The commercial organizations that may have been overlooking the farmer as a desirable factor in the increase of membership have had their eyes shut at this time to a most profitable occupation.

Told That There Was No Cure for Him.

"After suffering for over twenty years with indigestion and having some of the best doctors here tell me there was no cure for me, I think it only right to tell you for the sake of other sufferers as well as your own satisfaction that a 25-cent bottle of Chamberlain's Tablets not only relieved me but cured me within two months although I am a man of 55 years," writes J. M. Gibson, Houston, Texas. Obtainable everywhere.

B. O. Evans & Co. The Store with a Conscience

COWS WERE ON SPREE.

"Send for the veterinarian at once," was the order given by Samuel Sherard, a farmer living west of Purdue University, when he noticed several of his cows acting strangely in the pasture.

Sherard walked into his pasture yesterday and beheld the most disorderly pastoral scene that ever confronted his vision. Beside a blooded Holstein, had apparently taken the count and lay feet upward on the sward. She was hiccoughing like a balking automobile motor. Three other cows were lying about her in a semi-circle and they seemed to be taking no interest in life. Darby, a big Jersey milker, was trying to emulate her ancestors in doing the jump over the moon. On all sides were tired looking cows, some recumbent, others on their knees. Their boyne solos were of the "washa matter" type.

Sherard's neighbors were aroused and soon there was a board of inquiry in session. The veterinarians came, investigated and found that there were no symptoms of disease in the cows. Then it was discovered that in a nearby orchard was a cider press and on the ground was a big pile of apple pulp, better known as pomace. The cows had feasted on it, the alcohol had done its work and the animals were actually on a spree.—Lafayette (Ind.) Dispatch to Indianapolis News.
