"Grow Legumes and Cut Nitrogen Bill"

Clemson College, July 31. Four parties of institute workers, all agricultural experts from Clemson College, are going into every county in South Carolina and impressing upon the farmers they talk to the great need for winter cover crops. They will take up all phases of agriculture, but all have been instructed to leave no stone unturned to encourage the planting of large acreages in cover crops this fall. One meeting in every county has been designated "Vetch and Clover Day" and this institute will be devoted largely to a discussion of these subjects.

W. W. Long, state agent of demonstration and director of extension of Clemson College, in the following statement, impresses upon farmers the importance of cover crops to South Carolina:

"The limiting factor in Southern agriculture," said Mr. Long, "is the lack of vegetable matter in the soil. I have said this before and I expect to say it many more times, because it is something that cannot be said too often. If we could make the farmers of this state realize the full meaning of this statement and could make them direct their agricultural efforts accordingly, a large part of our task in South Carolina would be accomplished. Farmers should require no other proof of what is to be accomplished by the use of cover crops than the proof given by the abundant yields on virgin soils about them. Virgin soil means merely soil with ample vegetable matter or humus. Worn-out soil means soil in which this necessary element is wanting. Putting a clean-cultivated crop on land year after year is certain to bring about a 'worn-out' condition, unless one resorts to the use of cover crops each winter, which is man's method of restoring to the soil the vegetable matter which has been taken from it during the summer. This State, according to a bulletin of the Department of Agriculture, had only 387 acres in clover of all kinds in 1909. Today we have many thousands of acres in clover. It is probable that the percentage of increase in acreage of leguminous crops for the four years last past has been greater in South Carolina than in any other state. Notwithstanding this fact, we have simply made a beginning."

"A farmer's first need is good land. The lands of the south have been depleted by a combination of unfortunate circumstances and carelessness. The southern farmer's first need is, therefore, to make his land good and the most economical and easiest way to do this is by the use of winter cover crops. During the warm spells which frequently occur in South Carolina in winter, large quantities of nitrogen become available in the soil and escape if there is no crop to take care of them. In addition to holding this valuable element in the soil, legumes used for winter cover crops take large quantities of nitrogen from the air, a property peculiar to them, thus making soil even richer than when they were put into it, instead of poorer, as do most other crops. Legumes are the best friends the South Carolina farmer has. Grow legumes and cut the nitrogen bill."

The Hague in History. The Hague was originally a mere hunting station of the counts of Holland. Its name freely translated means "the count's hedge." The little town first rose to importance in 1527, when it was made the seat of the supreme court of Holland. In 1584 it became the place of assembly of the States general and the residence of the ambassadors, since when it has been the diplomatic conference place of Europe.

What Else Could He Do? "Henry," said Mrs. Jason to her husband, the other evening, "did you get a letter for me today?" "No," he replied, "I didn't." "There was nothing for you," "Henry," said the old lady very sternly, "I want you to speak to the postmaster in the morning and ask him to look around carefully. There must be a letter there for me." Henry went home at noon and lied about asking the postmaster.

The March of Noon

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

"Where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon."—The Song of Solomon, 1, 7.

Noon comes on slow and silent feet;
We see it move without a sound,
We see it march across the wheat—
No fly's shrill note, no drum's dull beat
Times noon upon its stately round.

The lazy droning of the mill,
The breeze that all the morn has played
Among the flowers on the hill,
The careless singing of the rill
Hush as though they were half afraid.

The bees that crooned their busy hum
With undertones of mellow mirth
Upon the flowers now lie dumb,
Since mystic noon has slowly come
To lift the shadows from the earth.

And all the fields and all the lands
And forest trees and whisp'ring grass
Rest as do men with folded hands,
For each one of them understands
That quiet rules till noon shall pass.

The spell is cast upon the birds,
They trill no wayward, thoughtless tune;
As statues stand the solemn herds
While in a peace too deep for words
Goes marching past the hour of noon.

And now the noon, full-clad in gold,
Has marched in clinging silence on,
Has loosed the world from out its hold,
And ever-new and ever-old
In all its songless state is gone.

ANGELINA'S NEIGHBOR

By ROSEMARY ENGER.

"I tell you," said Miss Angelina to her neighbor, Mrs. Purvis, as she "turned" the heel of the stocking she was knitting, "I've no respect for a man that can't turn his hand to do a woman's work when he has to. You can't tell me that it's bellittin' for a man to know how to spread a bed up slick, and wash dishes in water that's hot enough to get the grease off 'em. Am sure there's many a man would be dead and buried of starvation if he didn't know enough to fry potatoes and mix up a batch of pancakes for himself."

"But, Angelina," put in soft-voiced Mrs. Purvis, "the poor soul we're talkin' about ain't ever had any call to do none o' those things. I understand his sister has always done it, 'till she died. It's hard on 'im, too, comin' to a strange place an' havin' to make new friends an' all that."

"Well I never!" Miss Angelina's knitting dropped into her lap. "You're awful set on sympathy," with Mr. Leety, ain't you, Jane Purvis? Well, as I don't even care enough about him to keep the chickens and hogs, and incidently myself late for supper by talkin' about him, I guess I'll be leavin'."

Mr. Leety lived next door to her. Their orchard fences were identical. His ruses fell on her side in the fall, and her sheep's noses on his. She always threw his apples over, and watched them rot in disgust. Never an apple spoiled on Miss Angelina's ground.

Then one day she woke up with a headache. It spread down her neck. Then her legs began to ache. She was also very tired. It got worse every day for a week. She had never had a doctor and held out as long as she could. One day, she managed to get a note into the letter box at the gate addressed to Mrs. Purvis.

In two weeks she came to herself again, in spite of the fact that the doctor said it was the worst case of typhoid fever he had ever known, and that she couldn't get well.

Mrs. Purvis and Sarah took turns nursing her and some way she pulled through. In six weeks she was able to be around a little, and in two months she was almost her old self. It was pretty late fall now, and the wind was getting sharp.

One day Miss Angelina opened the barn door. Some one was milking "Simmins' man," she supposed. Well, she wouldn't need him after today and she'd find out how much she owed him. She opened her mouth to ask when the man turned and she recognized her shiftless neighbor, Mr. Leety. Her lips straightened. "Why are you milking my cow?"

He got up. "Why, I guess because I didn't think you was able. I don't know any other reason."

"An' I suppose you have been supplying your own wants all the time I've been sick?"

"No'm, I ain't." His eyes flashed.

"Well, I'll do my own milkin' now. I'll send your money over when I figger it up. Good mornin'."

So Mr. Leety took his departure, and things at Miss Angelina's moved on in their accustomed schedule.

On Sunday she sent his money over to Mrs. Purvis. And on Monday Mrs. Purvis took the money, went to town and bought some things, which she sent out to Miss Angelina by parcel post, with a note.

"He won't take anything, so I went to town and bought some stuff for you to hem. He needs sheets and towels and tablecloths. He's a very kind man. No one else could come. If it hadn't been for him your live stock would have starved."

Miss Angelina was thunderstruck, indignant, puzzled, and repentant in the next 24 hours.

In three days the things were done and she took them over herself.

Mr. Leety opened the door when she knocked, and in spite of his surprise politely invited her in.

After he had dumped some things off a chair, he asked her to sit down. And then Miss Angelina humbly presented her offerings. He accepted them gratefully.

"It's pretty hard," he said ruefully, "gettin' along alone. The house work does get me. I never was no hand to cook, nor sew, nor keep things in order. I just can't take it somehow. It's more in my line to—"

"Yes," broke in his visitor quickly, "it's in your line to be kind-hearted and generous to people who've been hateful to you an'—an' I'm mighty sorry. You poor, poor man! To think of all the things I didn't have done for you and didn't, an' all the things you needn't have done for me an' did. I'm ashamed."

"Oh, Miss Angelina, don't say that. But I've been awful homesick. If you'd just let me come over some evenings an' talk, it'd do me a world o' good. I get pretty lonesome."

"So do I, Mr. Leety. You're surely welcome, an' I've always got pie an' cookies."

So Mr. Leety is now wearing well-darned hosiery and eating three good meals a day in a well-ordered house, 'n' Miss Angelina has changed her name.

"Fire Damp Whistle."

An ingenious invention for warning miners of fire damp is a kind of whistle which the gas automatically affects. If there is 1 per cent of dangerous gas the whistle sounds broken and uneven notes, and when the gas reaches the danger point of 5 per cent there is a succession of rapid, throbbing notes which are easily heard. Professor Heber is the inventor, and he has named the device the "Fire damp whistle."

For Unpleasant Odors.

Burnt coffee will free the house from cooking odors. So will a smouldering piece of string. A handful of lavender flowers in a bowl with lemon peel covered with boiling water imparts a gentle fragrance to an entire apartment.
