On offering his service to his country, he was examined and passed as a first lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps. In August he was ordered to join the American forces in France. In company with friend, Dr. W. C. Marett, of Oco-nee county, a physician also bound for France, he left Greenville for New York City. For several days they stayed here before being put aboard the transport. After seven-teen days they landed at Liverpool teen days they landed at Liverpool without experiencing the much dreaded seasickness. Crossing England by rail, they enjoyed the warm, beautiful and interesting country, a contrast to the cold voyage across. On reaching France they found the rains and mud very disagreeable. Dr. Marett was here assigned to the artillery and Dr. Smith to the in-fantry. The friends were separated perhaps never to meet again. Or if they do, as a North Carolina Governor once said to a South Carolina official, "It will be a long time be-tween drinks."

Dr. Smith has done quite a bit of practice among the French people. This, however, when no interpreter

I am having a French-man make you a Christmas present. There is a history to this thing which I will explain later. It is a haadsome vase which has no great value but when you get the history and vase together it is almost price-legs. Wish I could tell you just what I am doing but the censor prevents.
