

Mrs. A. D. Oliphant
Author of Reader

The following news item from The Bamberg Herald will be read with interest by the friends of Mrs. A. D. Oliphant, who is pleasantly remembered in Barnwell as Miss May Simms, a daughter of the late Mr. W. Gilmore Simms, for many years Clerk of Court for Barnwell County:

Designed for use in the grammar school grades to give the children of South Carolina a broader and deeper knowledge of their State, Mrs. Mary C. Simms Oliphant, of Greenville, has written the South Carolina Reader, which, profusely illustrated, is just from the press.

Mrs. Oliphant, who is editor of Simms' history of South Carolina, says in the preface to her new work:

"One big object of education is to prepare students for intelligent and useful citizenship. Every young man and young woman have two hard problems that they must face early in life: the first is the selection of their vocation, and the other is the choice of the locality in which they will live. . . . It is wise to teach pupils, who are changing from childhood to manhood and womanhood, about basal economical and industrial conditions of their own communities. They should learn of the State's resources and how to conserve State's resources and how to conserve them; of its opportunities and how to grasp them; and of its industries and how they operate."

In compiling The South Carolina Reader, Mrs. Oliphant has had this thought in mind, as is apparent from even a superficial examination of her work. The author may have been depended upon to give the historic touch to her reader, which she has done in a most pleasing and effective manner.

The first chapter deals with South Carolina as the first visitors saw it, and there are chapters dealing with the South Carolina Indians and with South Carolina's glorious past. But not too much stress has been laid upon historical values. The State's mineral resources, trade conditions of the past, present and future, field crops, diversified farming, old and new ways of travel, the State's rivers, the story of cotton manufacturing in the State, manufacturing industries, the birds and the trees and the literature of the State all form intensely interesting chapters. The author gives evidence of having realized that history does not teach all that the children of South Carolinians should know about their State, of its great opportunities for development and of their individual opportunities as workers and as citizens.

No one, young or old, can peruse the pages of the South Carolina Reader and not learn a great deal of value about the State—without, in fact, knowing his or her State better and perhaps loving it more. As a supplementary text-book, The South Carolina Reader will prove its own recommendation and its use in the school room as such will undoubtedly prove helpful and beneficial in the proper training of South Carolina youth.

FIX BAYONETS!

By John W. Thomason, Jr.

MAYBE you saw "What Price Glory" or "The Big Parade," the most talked about stage play and movie of the war. Here is what Laurence Stallings, the author of both, and himself an officer who saw plenty of fighting, says about the story written by Capt. Thomason: "Fix Bayonets! is, in the opinion of many of us who ought to know, the finest account of their sons in battle which the American people have received in their sometimes military history."

We take pleasure in announcing this Epic of the War as a Serial in
