Laurens at Atlanta-Miss Clay at the Opera House-Laurens En-

Laurers at Atlanta.

The Laurens Committee should be The Laurens Committee should begin to show signs of life. Gov. Evans says the State will be fully represented as to all her resources. The minerals in the county should especially be displayed. Our granite, marble, corundum, gold and iron ores would attract attention. Let the specimens be prepared in time. Our committee is a first rate one, and Laurens expects them to be on the alert.

On Tuesday evening at the residence of Mr. J. A. Copeland, Miss Cora Lowe, of Baltimore, and Mr. W. A. Wharton, of this City, were married, only a few friends being present and Rev. J. D. Miss Clay at the Opera House.

Miss Clay, of Kentucky, is to speak in the Opera House on Tuesdey even-ing next on the subject of Woman's suffrago. She will be accompanied by Mrs. Virginia D. Young, of South Car-olina. Miss Clay is said to have inherited the oratorial powers of her ancestor Henry Clay and to be well versed in everything relating to the question she will discuss, to have every argument at her tongue's end.
Whether Laurens is in sympathy with Miss Clay's views or not she should be accorded a respectful hearing by the enlightened audience which is to be found in our town.

Laureus Enterprise.

Laurens is hard to beat for enterprise, low prices, and first-class goods.
Against many competitors the firm of S. M. & E. H. Wilkos & Co. secured the contract for furnishing the new and handsome hotel of the Messrs
Simpson at the famous Glenn Springs. The firm furnishes out and out forty of the new rooms. Their bid was accept-ed against bids from Baltimore and elsewhere. It goes without saying that the rooms will be perfectly comfortable as well as beautiful. We note with pleasure this evidence of enterprise in first class Laurens business house.

Free Shell, a yeang man in his teens, con of Capt. G. W. Shell, of this coanty, went to Atlanta recently. On the evening of the 15th inst., he attended a Methodist Church service. Fred found himself in the neighborhood of a handsome sweet-sixteen Atlanta belle and had passed to her a note asking leave to escort her home. One of two young gentlemen passed the note and the other sniggered. The pretty miss smiled. It seems that Fred was not up on the right thing in Atlanta. A policeman was worshipping near by who took it all in and after the service escorted Fred to the police station under corted Fred to the police station under a charge of disturbing the public wor-ship. Fred made the necessary deposit and went home, having learned the lesand went home, having learned the lesson that in Atlanta decorum must be observed, at least in church. The young man who sniggered and his companion were likewise given a lesson in church behavior. The Atlanta papers made a parade of the incident and emphasize the fact of Fred being the son of an ex-Congressman, as if that fact should bar the young gentleman from being gallant to a sweet creature. Nothing is said, but it is assumed that the little lady who smiled a sweet assent escaped the virtous indignation of the righteous prosecutors. The won-of the righteous prosecutors. The won-der is that a Laurens boy, should be go-ing into eestacles over other than our own dear darlings. The fact that Napoleon's military career began during the first year of his life, with the forced marches which by his command his father executed at dead of night, is pointed out by Mr. John Kendrick Bangs in his Mr. Bona-parte of Corsica; and such items of inparte of Corsica; and such items of information—intimately personal and interesting, yet hitherto unpublished—will be found in surprising abundance. The crowning merit of a humorous work is that the author should know where to draw the line, and at that precise point it has here been drawn. In this book there is no violence done to history: the author has had record. In this book there is no violence done to history; the author has had regard for the recognized authorities, but has embroidered the thought with wit— not otherwise than as the artist, H. W. McVickar, has enlivened and decorated the pages with drawings. (Harper & Brothers.)

We had our share of the great bliz-zard that characterized the weather on zard that characterized the weather on Wednesday and Thursday of last week; with thunder, lightning, hail and rain we were urgently reminded of Tams' famous midnight gallop when "The De'il had business on his hand."
