

"I WISH" -- "I WILL"

"I wish" is the dividing line between desire and attainment. Nothing is ever attained by wishing unless there's the Will to do it.

The man or woman who says "I will have money," and begins that minute to save, will generally have their desires gratified.

The determination back of the desire spurs them on to greater effort. Opportunities are theirs that never come to the moneyless, thrifless spender.

Stop wishing. Start saving--to-day--Here. We pay 4 per cent interest on Savings Accounts. A dollar is all you need to start one. Will you do it?

Heart Symptoms

The ailments of women include symptoms of heart trouble known as palpitation of the heart. The palpitation is so violent at times as to be really painful and leads the patient to fear she has heart disease. Ninety per cent of such cases are not heart disease at all but only a symptom of a liver disorder which has affected the normal action of the heart, and on applying the proper remedies the unusual throbbing ceases. The stomach and digestion need strengthening and the depressing effect of these disorders on the female organism must be corrected. For the latter purpose there is no more effective remedy to be found anywhere than

DR. SIMMONS Squaw Vine Wine

It conveys a strengthening influence to the delicate female organism, re-establishes regular and healthy periods, overcomes the painful symptoms, builds up the nerves and puts the generative system in fine healthy condition. For the liver and bowel disorders one or two doses of Simmons Liver Medicine is all that is needed. It clears the stomach and bowels of impurities; helps digestion and the proper nourishment of the body the result of which is sound, healthy conditions all through the system.

LARRY GANTT ASSAILS THE SENIOR SENATOR

Declares Tillman is Untrue to His People. One of Former Loudest Tillman Champions Severely Arraigns His Former Leader.

(News and Courier.)

Would anybody have believed twenty years ago that the time would ever come when T. Larry Gantt would turn on Ben Tillman and bitterly assail him as a traitor? Capt. Tillman in those days had no louder champion. Through the Columbia Register and in other newspapers Larry, to quote his own words, "tried to do with his pen what Ben did with his tongue." It was Larry, so it has always been understood, who first suggested to Tillman, then governor, the establishment of the State dispensary system, Larry having gotten the idea from the county dispensary which was then in operation in Athens, Ga.

Larry is now running a weekly newspaper, the News-Reporter, in Whiteville, N. C., just across the line from Horry county, and in his last issue he devoted nearly four columns to a review of Mr. Tillman's career in the endeavor to prove that by his letter urging the election of Jones proved himself a traitor to the "common people," who put him into office. Larry being now as enthusiastically for Governor Blease as ever he was for Capt. Tillman. His disaffection for the latter is not, it appears, of recent origin. He says:

How Tillman Was Nominated.

"We have seen for years that the environments of Washington city and new associations had wrought a complete change in Tillman's policy, if not his vitals, and when he voted for Lorimer, we knew that the day had come when the masses of South Carolina, if not the Democrats of that state, must search out another leader who was in closer touch with them and their interests. But we did not criticize Tillman, for we disliked to help pull down a popular idol, but quietly waited for that idol, of its own free will, to tumble from the pedestal upon which admiring constituents had placed it."

Larry has a good many interesting things to say in the article which follows this remarkable statement. Perhaps the most interesting is his declaration that the "Reform movement" never profited in the slightest degree the "one-gallus wool hat boys" who formed its backbone. But his article speaks for itself. He declares his purpose to write a defense of "the common people of the Palmetto State" from which "it will be seen that the charge Tillman makes of ingratitude is laid at the wrong door," and with this professed purpose in view he proceeds as follows:

"When John L. M. Irby, in the famous March convention that gave birth to the Reform movement, brought about the nomination of Tillman (we believe by one vote) after he (Tillman) had given up the fight and was found sitting on the banks of the river ready to go back home to his farm. Ben Tillman was a small dairy farmer in Edgesfield county, and report said he was in the same fix as thousands of other farmers at that time, losing money, if not a practical bankrupt."

"No one can deny that Tillman made a magnificent fight for the release of his people from practical political servitude, and taught them their rights and their power. He triumphed, and in their love and gratitude the farmers continued to heap honors and rewards upon his head. Even since 1890 he has been holding lucrative offices and drawing large salaries. It is believed that today Tillman is a rich man. Any way, he and his family have for more than twenty years been living on the fat of the land, as it were, and enjoying all the pleasures and luxuries of life.

The Charge of Ingratitude.

"As it was the votes of the men whom Ben Tillman denounced as ingrates, and so severely criticised, that gave him those high offices, and it was the men to whom Tillman rightfully says he owes his scant majority over Talbert and Dial, who saved him from a crushing and ignominious defeat, after writing that eleventh hour letter attacking Governor Blease. No one denies the good work Tillman did for the masses in South Carolina, but no man who ever battled for his people was so long and richly rewarded. Without intending to make any invidious comparison, we would ask, what general among the struggling American colonists did better or more valiant service for his country than Benedict Arnold the hero of Saratoga? But Arnold betrayed his country in its darkest hour, and went over to the enemy, and his name will ever be used to express the blackest treachery. Now, we do not intend to convey the impression that there is any connection whatever between the career of Benedict Arnold and Benjamin Ryan Tillman, but we simply cite this case to show that when a person goes over to the enemy, when the cause for which he has so valiantly fought seems lost—as in the fight between the Blease and Jones factions in South Carolina, when every newspaper and great influence was enlisted against Blease and pulling for Jones—the humble masses are wide awake and silently watching the line-ups. To our mind, it was Tillman who deserted the wool-at, one-gallus boys, and not they who deserted Tillman. The people judge a man by the company he keeps, and when Tillman gave his once-powerful aid to an element that had so vindictively, yea venomously, fought him in the past, and left as he thought and every outsider believed, his former adherents and their gallant young standard-bearer they had chosen to go down in defeat, he that moment lost the confidence and support of the common people in his State, and to whom he owed much—in fact the lifting up of Tillman from poverty and obscurity into distinction and affluence, if not into great riches for a Southerner.

A Profitless Movement.

"Now, let us look upon the other side of the shield and see what the wool-hat, one-gallus farmers, who had made Tillman what he now is, have gained by the bitter political warfare and strife that has been waged in their state for some two decades? It is true that they have been educated as to their political power and rights but Tillman does not deserve all credit for this for with the establishment of the rural postal system the farmers have made wonderful strides of late. In other states than South Carolina they have thrown off the shackles of political servitude and are now settling their differences at the ballot. Rural voters are getting better informed and better educated every year, and they would have broken the chains of bondage, placed upon them by ring-ruler politicians, had Ben Tillman never been born.

"But for the sake of argument, we will give Tillman credit for all that he claims. Is there another man in South Carolina who has reaped a richer harvest from the political crop he planted than Tillman himself? And what has those wool-hat one-gallus boys gained? Did that reform movement put one red copper into a single farmer's pocket? Did it take one second's work from his daily toil? Did it relieve his poor, hard-working wife of one of the thousands of tasks that she must discharge during the day? Did it put another crumb upon his table or add one fagot to the kitchen fire? Did it enable him to buy one speck more of flour for his money or extend for one instant the day of grace on that crop lien or note? What did the farmer receive in return for quitting his fields to repair to the ballot box and vote for Tillman, and the other reform candidates, save the empty privilege of hurrahing over his victory when the returns were received?

"The farmer then returned to his field and ploughed on, ploughed on, while Ben Tillman and the politicians proceeded to reap every grain of the political harvest. Tillman's arraignment of his people for ingratitude is like a farmer abusing the faithful mule that made his crop. The only difference is the farmer did feed and stable that mule, while those Tillman voters worked for nothing and boarded themselves.

The Farmers' Alliance.

"When Ben Tillman first started his political career, there was a movement organized that did more than all else for the relief and uplifting of farmers—the Alliance. Did Tillman join in this work and lend his aid and talent to make it a success? No, indeed. When the Alliance was in its swaddling clothes, as it were, and its existence like the life of an infant hung in the balance, it was Tillman who joined its enemies to crush this great movement for the emancipation of our Southern farmers, and it was only when convinced that his (Tillman's) political elevation hinged upon the success of the Alliance that he gave it his aid. There is not an old Allianceman in South Carolina but knows this to be true.

"But in their forgiving kindness and gratitude, the one-gallus boys overlooked this and for years blindly followed Tillman. Does not every one who has watched that Alliance movement know that it saved our farmers from serfdom, for their lands were fast passing into the control of the merchants and others with whom they traded, and had not the tillers of the soil been aroused to the danger that menaced them, you would today see a few large landed proprietors in the South and men who now own the farms be but serfs renting fields that were once their own. But at a critical moment it was Tillman's voice that was lifted against the grandest and noblest movement ever organized for the relief of the man behind the plow, A Reaper Always.

"Ben Tillman has ever enjoyed the happy faculty of always reaping crops planted and tilled by others. He waits until the grain is ready to gather, when he will give a harvest home among the laborers of his state and gather the entire crop into his own garner.

"Tillman refers to the establishment
