

That Mountville Barbecue.

The glorious fifth was ushered in with such a storm, it seemed a sin, and all day long it rained and rained, and our breaking hearts they pained and pained.

So much of work seemed now in vain, caused by this unceasing rain. Shall we cook or shall we not? What luck today will be our lot? How we moved in much suspense, Cook we must, in self-defense: The beef was butchered, the hogs were dead

But where were the people to be fed? We gazed with longing up the road strode; A passing cloud, a streak of light Just filled our souls with pure delight.

But we must work if we would win, And now some few were coming in; We kept in mind our great expenses, And tried to measure up the consequences.

At last we rung the dinner bell, And then a rain of people fell! Where they came from none could tell O, the magic power of a dinner bell!

Though in numbers rather light They sure made up in appetite, All seemed to feel first rate, And they ate and ate and ate.

It seemed an army had been fed And still the people called for bread, Just before we succumbed to grief, A train from Greenwood brought relief.

We know it was a rainy day But we are sorry for those who stayed away, And when next we issue invitations Let nothing cause you hesitations.

We had an ideal spot in which to cook and serve that barbecue and we had as chief cook, Mr. W. B. Fuller, of Cross Hill, who is well known as an expert in that line. And now at 73 years young, he has lost none of his skill in this craft, but rather, has improved with age, as on all sides we heard the remark "the best cooked dinner I ever ate." Uncle Benton has many friends and relatives in Mountville who were glad to have him with them. And the day for him was complete, but for the absence of his only sister, Mrs. Eugenia Teague, who is spending the summer in Alabama with her daughter, Mrs. Irene Langley.

The speakers engaged for this occasion failed to reach Mountville on account of the rain, but Col. J. H. Wharton gave an interesting and instructive address, which was enjoyed by all present.

In the late afternoon, there was base ball. The first game was between Cross Hill and Mountville. The victory was to Mountville, and our boys really enjoyed whipping the Cross Hill boys.

The Cross Hill girls failing to appear, the second game was between the girl's team and the married men of Mountville. The game was interesting and much enjoyed by the spectators. Of course the girls won.

Through the efforts of our R. S. I. A. the school lot has been cleared of weeds and a plot plowed for the sowing of clover and grass. The association is also planning to have the lot set with beautiful shade trees.

The friends of the school will be glad to hear that despite the rainy day, barbecue put between forty and fifty dollars in our treasury.
