SAYS MCGOWAN'S BUREAU
100 PER CENT EFFICIENT

Department Headed by Distinguished Laurens Boy Gets High Compliments From House and Senate.

"During the recent investigations by the Senate and House of the different bureaus of the Washington government, the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts received the very highest compliments that could possibly be paid by the inspecting committees. This bureau is, as every one knows, presided over by Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, the most distinguished living son of Laurens. Says Senator Tillman, chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, "I invite any Senator to visit his bureau"—the bureau of Supplies and Accounts—"at any time and if he can show wherein it is not the most efficient bureau in the government service today, excepting none, I will apologize for my remarks."

Hon. F. A. Brittain, member of the Naval Committee from the House said "I am satisfied that your bureau is running at about 100 per cent efficiency."

Not only these authorities but every man of importance who has visited this bureau has come away impressed with the excellence of the methods employed and with the immensity of the good results that are being produced by Admiral McGowan. But "Sam", as the folks in Laurens call him when he is in Washington, doesn't seem satisfied with 100 per cent efficiency, as the following intro-bureau order will show. The one quoted is one of the several orders issued thanking the men under him for their assistance and also asking for continued improvement. The order follows:

Intra-Bureau Order No. 105

NAVY DEPARTMENT

(Bureau of Supplies and Accounts)
WASHINGTON, D. C.

February 4, 1916.

To All Officers and Chiefs of Sections, via Assistant to the Bureau and Civilian Assistant.

1. Attention is particularly invited to the following extract from a speech made in the United States Senate Friday, January 28, 1916, by Senator B. R. Tillman, the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

"I invite any Senator to visit his bureau"—the bureau of Supplies and Accounts—"at any time and if he can show wherein it is not the most efficient bureau in the Government service today, excepting none, I will apologize for my remarks."

2. Without regard to whether or not this invitation for critical inspection be accepted, it is our duty—now even more than ever before—to do our best to deserve the Senator's very handsome estimate of us.

3. To that end, we will not only continue to spell bureau with a small b and NAVY all in capitals but also be sure that today's best work can rightly be regarded as not quite good enough for tomorrow's standard.

4. Meanwhile, for what you have done thus far, I congratulate and thank you all.

McGowan.

How Far North Will the Boll Weevil Do Serious Damage?

With the boll weevil making an unusual eastward advance in Alabama and Georgia a very considerable northward movement from Oklahoma eastward to north Alabama, many cotton growers are asking as to the probable effect of the weevil in the northern half of the Cotton Belt.

Of course, in attempting to answer this question, the only safe guide must be the experiences of similar sections to the westward that have already had the weevil for a number of years. While it cannot be unqualifiedly asserted that two counties possessing identical climatic, soil and labor conditions will be affected by the weevil in like degree, it certainly can be asserted that such will probably be the case. Granting that this is a reasonable supposition, let us see what has been the experience of the western part of the northern half of the Cotton Belt under weevil conditions.

A very careful investigation of the ginning reports issued by the United States Census Bureau shows that nowhere north of parallel 33 1-2 north latitude (a line running east and west approximately through Atlanta, Ga., Birmingham, Ala., and Paris, Texas) has any county suffered because of the weevil a greater decrease in cotton production than occurred during adverse seasons before the weevil came. If this has been the case in the humid, timbered areas of Arkansas and north Mississippi, it certainly seems reasonable to expect about the same results from the weevil in all newly invaded sections north of parallel 33 1-2.

It must not be inferred from this that the weevil will not do damage in the territory under consideration; for in all likelihood, the weevil will eventually go as far north as cotton is grown and will particularly during wet seasons following very mild winters, affect the crop very considerably.

However, on an average this damage will be far less serious than in the extreme southern part of the Cotton Belt. In fact, if we assume that the weevil is "100 per cent efficient" in destructiveness along the Gulf Coast, this "efficiency in destructiveness" gradually and regularly decreases to the northward until the extreme limits of cotton production are reached in Kansas, Missouri, and Kentucky, where it is very close to zero.

It must be understood that what has been said here does not apply to a strip from 75 to 100 miles wide along the Atlantic Seaboard, for climatic conditions along the South Atlantic Coastal Plain are considerably modified by the influence of the ocean. Winter temperatures average higher than in inland sections in the same latitude and the summer rainfall is heavier. These factors, of course, will prove favorable to the boll weevil and it ravages will very probably be more severe than will be the case inland in the same latitude.

However, fortunately for the future of Cotton production in the Carolinas, it appears that the modifying influence of the ocean is not so marked beyond 55 or 60 miles inland. In this narrow belt only a comparatively small proportion of the crop of these two states is grown; but here weevil damages will likely be very severe, approximately perhaps 50 per cent in extreme southeast South Carolina and gradually decreasing northeastward. As in Georgia and Florida, the Sea Island cotton crop of South Carolina is grown under climatic conditions favorable to the weevil, and unless the most determined and concerted action is taken against the pest it is probable that production will be heavily curtailed. —Progressive Farmer.

Greenwood Young Man Plunges to Rescue of His Wife Through Door of Jay-Smith Company.

The front plate glass door of Jay-Smith Clothing Company was no barrier to a young man of the county this morning when he saw the necessity of going to the rescue of his wife who had lost control of a mule she was trying to hold on the street nearby. While talking to several parties in the store he noticed that the mule he had left in charge of his wife had become unruly, and without taking time to open the door—

Crash ding-along-lang! he plunged headfirst through the thick glass and was at the head of the fractious animal before Mr. E. F. Jay had time to figure out whether the disturbance was caused by the eclipse of the sun or the sudden adjourning of the South Carolina General Assembly.

After the young man brushed a little blood from a small cut on the side of his face, the only wound received in his precipitous flight, he remarked casually: "I certainly do love my wife."—Greenwood Daily Journal.
