

Wealth That Works

Money saved and deposited in a bank is wealth that works. Wealth that works is capital. Unlike brain and muscle, it does not wear out or deteriorate. It grows and improves.

The only gain from labor is what is saved. Labor, therefore, makes wealth and when wealth works it is capital.

Capital at work pays wages, which, when saved, creates more capital. Labor is the producer when labor saves.

Savings bring independence. A savings bank is a public servant.

Replies to Old Farmer

Editor of The Advertiser:

In your issue of October 4, there appeared an article by "Old Farmer" taking me to task for having implied in my recent letter, originally published in The New York Times and copied in your paper, that the supporters of Cole Blease one and all are 'gaping rustics' and ignoramuses. I must beg of you sufficient space to make my reply to "Old Farmer's" accusation.

I do not believe that I can be accused, justly accused, of having made any such assertion either directly or by implication. What I said in my letter was this: "With the 'gaping rustics' ranged around" and with a man like Cole Blease on the speaker's stand casting his spell over them, making them believe and vigorously maintain that black is white, the onlooker who still keeps his equilibrium is almost tempted to doubt whether a democracy can long endure the test." If this is an accusation, or can legitimately be said to imply the accusation, that all of the supporters of Blease are 'gaping rustics', then I confess myself unable to understand the English language or to use it in such manner as to refrain from saying what I do not mean. To say that 'gaping rustics' are among the followers of Blease is surely not equivalent to the assertion that all the followers of Blease are 'gaping rustics'; it is one thing to say that Democrats in Congress voted for the eight-hour law, and it is altogether a different thing to say that all of the Congressmen who voted for the law were Democrats. Furthermore, the term 'rustic' is not such a bad term after all; it is closely akin to rural. And the whole phrase 'gaping rustics ranged around' is a quotation, as was indicated by the quotation marks, and was intended in no derogatory sense. I trust this explanation will appease "Old Farmer's" ire and return me to his good graces.

As to the term "ignoramus", it did not occur anywhere in my letter. I did speak of voters "who are not in the habit of thinking for themselves"; but I did not say that all the followers of Blease belonged to this class, nor would I agree that such voters are necessarily ignoramuses—if they are, then even "Old Farmer" must admit that the density of ignorance, not only in South Carolina, but in every state in the Union is appalling. So, in answer to "Old Farmer's" complaint that my letter lumps the Bleasites in to a common bunch of ignoramuses, the "headless boy" who has the honor to sign his name to this article and why by this good year of grace has reached the fairly mature age of thirty-five, humbly and respectfully, but firmly, pleads not guilty.

Of course, there are many good and true men who voted for Cole Blease with all the conscientiousness which characterizes many of those who are opposed to him. I should hate to find myself so pessimistic concerning the electorate of South Carolina as to think otherwise. Indeed, I count among my friends and, if I mistake not, among my relatives, some who supported Blease in the last election. I do not hold them in contempt for having done so, nor do I forthwith and without more ado consign them to the outer darkness with fools and ignoramuses. I appreciate the fact that there are many thinking men who support Blease, though I confess myself baffled by the logical process by which they reach their conclusion; however, I respect the right of every man to follow his own judgment in all matters, political, religious, and otherwise, and those who see fit to differ from my views are not regarded by me as imbeciles on that account. The one inalienable right which belongs to every man worthy of the name is the right to think for himself and to follow the dictates of his own best reason.

There is one implication of "Old Farmer's" criticism which I am almost inclined to resent. And that is that I am capable of "sophistry". I have in my life been variously classified; I was once taken for a detective, and even after I had reached the age of discretion I was mistaken for a Frenchman in college. But, so far as I remember, I have never before been called a "sophist". Since the one fundamental ambition of my life, the basic principle of my profession whose ethics I am strenuously endeavoring to live up to, is to shun all forms of "sophistry", I should be deeply indebted to "Old Farmer" if he would suggest to me the grounds upon which he bases his implied criticism. I assume that the only bit of writing of mine which has fallen under his observation is the letter here in question; if he has found in that letter evidences of sophistry, he will do me a great kindness by opening my eyes to them.

I am pleased to know that "Old Farmer" holds in sacred memory the friendship of my father. And I wish he had seen fit to sign his own name to his article. I honor my father's friends, and I am always glad to know them by name. In spite of his close association with my father, however, an association intensified no doubt by the strenuous political days of the nineties, I am constrained to think that "Old Farmer" has sorely misunderstood the habit of mind which was one of my father's distinguished traits. He seems to believe that, were my father alive today, he would be found among the supporters of Blease; I am confident that his vote, as his influence, would at every opportunity be cast with the opposition.

ACIDS IN STOMACH SOUR THE FOOD AND CAUSE INDIGESTION

"Pape's Diapepsin" fixes sour, gassy, upset stomachs in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach headache, you can surely get relief in five minutes.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on these fifty-cent cases of Pape's Diapepsin, then you will understand why dyspeptic troubles of all kinds must go, and why it relieves sour, out-of-order stomachs or indigestion in five minutes. "Pape's Diapepsin" is harmless; tastes like candy; though each dose will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood of the food you eat; besides, it makes you go to the table with a healthy appetite; but what will please you most, is that you will feel that your stomach and intestines are clean and fresh, and you will not need to resort to laxatives or liver pills for biliousness or constipation.

This city will have many "Pape's Diapepsin" cranks as some people will call them, but you will be enthusiastic about this splendid stomach preparation, too, if you ever take it for indigestion, gases, heartburn, sourness, dyspepsia, or any stomach misery.
