He gives her a casket filled with treasures, and straightway hirelings of The Secret Seven pursue her. The girl is the innocent cause of Strong's engagement to Funice Morton, a society girl, being broken off, and afterward she is seized by thugs from The Secret Seven and carried to their rendezvous. Strong traces her there, is terribly beaten in a terrific her there, is terribly beaten in a terrific fight, and the police carry him to his home unconscious while the kidnapers spirit Beverly away to a Chinese den, where they try to compel her to reveal the hiding place of the treasure, which is in the possession of Chief of Detectives Ackerton, although the girl does not know this. Strong, disguised as a Chinaman, gains entrance to the den, and is the means of saving Beverly.

> CHAPTER IX. Cupid's Puzzle.

Strong, safe in his home, with the faithful Wee See at his elbow, had much to be thankful for, but his silent thanksgiving was centered on one big event. He had restored Beverly Clarke to her mother, just as he had promised to do. As he thought of this he sighed which he owns-that is-you know, Rich young man. Factory ran itself; he spent the money. Didn't have to pay much attention to it."

"Humph!" muttered Sears. "Wouldn't do him any harm if he had to perform some real work. Well, I am going to call on him. See you later."

Right at the time Sears was learning of Strong's business interests The Seeret Seven was plotting to shatter that business, as another method of ruining Strong, whose life had been so marvelously saved twice after Dr. Zulph had ordered him killed. Jim Pearsall, member of The Secret Seven. who "worked" in Wall street, was the chief schemer this time. The first thing Pearsall did was to hammer at Strong's securities until they began tumbling in the stock market. Next he bred discontent among the laborers in the factory, who sent a delegation see Strong and demand higher wages. The delegation reached him just after he had received news of the slump in his securities

"Gentlemen," he said, "I believe in a square deal. But you can see for your self that I have been 'hit' in the stock market. It would be an utter impossibility to give you an increase at pres-

"All right, Mr. Strong," was the defant reply. "We like you, but liking doesn't get us money. We go on strike at once. We'll wreck your factory."

Strong, roused to instant action by this threat, was preparing to hurry over to the establishment when Sears entered. And as he appeared an evil spirit of The Secret Seven-the Spider -crept alongside a wall of the clubman's home, seized the telephone wire there and "tapped" it. Sears, after introducing himself to Strong, took out the treasure belonging to Beverly.

"This represents enormous weaith," he said. The generous-hearted Strong at once forgot his own troubles and telephoned to the Clarke home.

"Come right over with your moth-r," he almost shouted. "A big forer," he almost shouted.

STRONG TELLS BEVERLY OF HIS FINANCIAL RUIN.

him. The great, grinding god of strife and turmoil had brought them together, and then that gentle but pitiless little god, Cupid, had singled them out, Cupid had triumphed. Strong was in love with Beverly; she adored him.

Perhaps it is because trouble generally accompanies pleasure that Strong sighed as he smiled over the great happiness in his life. Certain it was that grim trouble awaited him-that trouble and tragedy were even then standing on the threshold of Beverly Chrke's life.

The enormous wealth left by her uncle was responsible for it all. Chief of Detectives Ackerton had that wealth | the street. It was a newsboy announclocked in a safe in his office. He was planning on that day to turn it over to Beverly. A few minutes before Ackerton entered his office, a tall, slender figure, masked and carrying a pistol, crept into the place and went straight to the safe which was in the great detective's laboratory.

All was dark. The figure fumbled at the safe-lock with nervous determination. Just then Ackerton appeared. With drawn pistol he strode into the laboratory. There were two flashes, and a man fell dead. It was Ackerton, The masked figure fled without having opened the safe. Soon afterward Ack. erton's assistant walked into the place and almost stumbled over the body of his chief. Horrified, he rushed to a telephone and called up Detective Rodman Sears, known as "the Sherlock Holmes of New York."

Sears, after a thorough examination of the laboratory, during which he gathered many finger-marks on the safe, announced that one of the slayer's fingers was missing.

"What does that mean?" asked Ackerton's assistant.

"It means that we must search for a man with three fingers," was the laconic reply. "Perhaps we will get him; perhaps we won't. What was in the safe that prompted this attempted robbery?" The assistant told of Beverly Clarke's treasure and of the tortures through which she had gone.

"Now," said Sears, "our search narrows down to a three-fingered member of this band. But we must get more evidence. I am going to Strong's home with these securities and see what else he knows of the case. By the way, this young fellow Strong-what does be do for a living besides being a wealthy clubman?"

"Why, until he got into this Clarke case he looked after a big factory and smiled. Beverly meant much to tune awaits you here." But Beverly's greatest joy was not in hearing these tidings. It was in hearing the voice of the man she loved. Smilingly she turned and told her mother what William had said, and then she and Mrs.

Clarke went to the Strong home. "These securities are the equivalent of a great fortune," Sears announced to them. "They can be converted into cash at once."

"Also, they are what The Secret Seven has been seeking," explained Willlam. "If one of them knew that the fortune was here we would be besieged. Why, Mrs. Clarke"- Here he was interrupted by a shrill cry out in ing an extra edition. Wee See scurried out to get one.

The shrewd little Americanized Chinaman's eyes bulged with a great surprise when he reappeared. Strong snatched the paper from his hand and read: "Receiver appointed for William Strong & Co. Factory closed. Employes demand more money while price of the product falls."

Crushed in spirit Strong tottered from the room. Beverly, seeing his intense agitation and not realizing what it meant, followed him and demanded an explanation. At first he refused to tell her, but when she snatched the paper from his hand, he stood with bowed head while she read that he was a ruined man. Finishing the article, she held her head up proudly and faced him.

"This ends my life of pleasure," said "Someone-some force-has Strong. ruined me. I'll have to find something "You helped me obtain the money I now have," said Beverly softly and tenderly, "Won't you let me help you now? Repay me when you can. Ohif you but knew of my gratitude-why my paltry riches are as nothing to the wealth of feeling in my heart"-

"No," protested Strong vigorously. "I thank you for your kindness. But I am a man. I would not accept money from a woman-even as a loan. I'll fight my own way. It shatters many ambitious plans I had, Miss Clarkeplans affecting you and myself. Per-haps 1 can build up a fortune. If so-well, the great secret of life is to bear ills and joys with equal indifference. I'll work at what my hands can find to do, and I'll be happy."

And thus, just as the pitless little god, Cupid, thought he had scored another hit, did fresh complications spoil his plans.

German Submarines Can Not Beat

London, March 30 .- In answering to juestions from the representative of he Associated Press, concerning submarine activities, Sir Edward Caron, first lord of the admiralty, said: "German statements are | exaggerated but no one suggests that subnarine warfare does not cause very serious damage, both to neutrals and belligerents. The losses, however, do not exceed the estimates on which we had based our policy and after the most careful consideration it is abundantly clear that Germany's hopes of starving us out are quite illusory. So far neutral countries have suffered more from German methods than have belligerents."

If You Suffer From Catarrh

don't make the fatal mistake of regarding it as a trifling matter. Authorities agree that Catarrh is an infection of the blood. Consequently, sprays, salves and lotions can afford only temporary relief, because they do not reach the source of the disease,—the blood. When you depend on these temporary remedies alone your case is likely to grow steadily worse until it becomes chronic and possibly affects the lungs.

But even if the infection does not go this far, the continuous dripping of mucous in the throat, the constant
