HELPING THE KAISER.

The Advertiser is not ready to question the motives of all those who say "the war is wrong, but we are in it and let's all pull together for victory." Their motives may be of the purest, their intentions the best, and they may think that they are "pulling together to win the war," but they are not. They are disrupting the nation and prolonging the war. When they say the war is wrong they leave a sting that nothing can remove.

It is easy to limit the effect on the young soldier training for battle, or the young farmer increasing the food output, of the manufacturer increasing his munitions when they are lead to believe that we are wrong in the war. Such doctrine dinned into the ears of the best patriot is calculated to make him indecisive, to dampen his enthusiasm and to erode his efficiency in whatever line he may be following. No soldier wants to risk his life in a cause that is wrong and this nation, as a people, do not want and will not fight a war that it does not believe in.

It is quite true that there were and are differences of opinion about the justice of entering the war, and those who were opposed to it had the right to express their opinion before a state of war was declared. The freedom of speech is the very foundation on which our government is built and every man has a right to express his opinion on any matter of public interest, so long as the question is debatable and undecided among. But now the time has passed when the wisdom or justice of the war may be debated, unless one favors an abject surrender of the principles for which we are fighting. Nothing can be gained now by questioning the right of entry into the war. We are in it and we are in it for a just cause. Anything less than free and undivided support of the government aids the enemy, thereby prolonging the war and will cause a larger loss of life and property. How the war is to be conducted, of course, is a subject on which we have a right and ought to express our opinion. Had the German people been able to do likewise the war would hardly have ever reached us.

The United States went to war with Spain on account of cruelties of the Spaniards toward the natives of the Island. This government believed in protecting the weak from the strong. No one, even among the most ardent pacifists, ever raises his voice against that war, even though it left consequences on one hand at its end. If we were right in going to the assistance of the Cubans, regardless of our own rights on the seas, we certainly should have rushed to the assistance of the Belgians, the Poles, the Armenians, the Servians and other of the weaker races which have had the heel of the Hun trampled upon their necks.

The United States has laid out a large program when it assays to make the world "safe for democracy". Yet, it may and will be done if the government has the support of the people. Making the world safe for democracy does not mean that this government has a right to advise the German people what kind of government they should have for themselves. It means that the Germans shall not have a government that endangers the peace and happiness of her neighbors. Freedom in this world may go too far, in world affairs as well as in private affairs. The German nation has no more right to make of itself an armed camp, perpetually threatening the lives and safety of its neighbors, than a man in this state has to carry a big gun in his hip pocket to menace the peace and safety of the people he meets on the street. There is no place for bullies even among nations. When President Wilson says that this government means to make the world safe for democracy, he means that he is going to put this bully out of business. He will do it by destroying the incentive for war, the autocratic power and the imperialistic ambitions of the Hohenzollerns.

The Hon. William Jennings Bryan has eloquently expressed the sentiments that should actuate us all in discussions of the war. He wrote as follows editorially:

"Before our nation enters a war it is perfectly proper to discuss the wisdom of going to war, but the discussion is closed when Congress acts. After that no one should be permitted to cloak attacks upon his government or aid to the enemy under the claim that he is exercising freedom of speech. No sympathy, therefore, will be wasted upon those who have been arrested for unpatriotic utterances. They abuse free speech. And this applies to attacks on the allies as well as to attacks upon the United States. We can no more allow our allies to be crushed than we can afford to be crushed ourselves. The defeat of our allies would throw the whole burden of the war upon us. We must stand together and fight it through. There are only two sides to a war—every American must be on the side of the United States."

"Yankee Pluck" Friday.

"Hurry, hurry! We must follow them, whatever they got!"

Pretty Polly Pollard urged her chauffeur to even greater speed as they raced after the fleeing automobile ahead of them. In the car ahead were her father and Ahmed Pasha, member of a foreign Embassy. And Polly was confident that her father, driven almost out of his mind by his desperate need for money, had stolen the valuable plans of a new army aeroplane from her sweetheart, and was about to sell them to a foreign embassy through the medium of Ahmed Pasha.

So Polly demanded speed. She must save her father and her sweetheart from this terrible thing. She must save her father from treason and her sweetheart from disgrace.

The two autos raced on. At length the first car stopped. The two men leaped out and hurried into a road house. Would Polly be in time?

The instant the car reached the road-house she jumped from the car and burst into the room where her father was about to complete the transaction with Pasha. She was in time. She had saved her father and her sweetheart.

See this thrilling photoplay. It bears the title of "Yankee Pluck" and is the newest World-Picture Brady-Made. Ethel Clayton is the star. See it at the Opera House on Friday.
