KOREANS KILLED BY JAPANESE

Nearly Two Score Slain in Church. Facts are Admitted. Authorities Say They Deplore Outrage and Those Guilty Have Been Punished.

Tokyo, May 1.—Thirty-five Koreans were shot or killed with swords or bayonets by Japanese soldiers in a Christian church building at Cheam-ni, 40 miles from Seoul in connection with the Korean independence movement.

This has been confirmed by an investigation by British and American consular agents and by missionary leaders in Korea. The facts are admitted by the Japanese authorities at Seoul, including the Governor General Hasegawa. The authorities say that they deplore the outrage, that those guilty of it have been punished and that orders have been given to prevent a recurrence.

Investigators also have found that Soochung, another village near Cheam-ni, was burned by the Japanese and that several Koreans there were wounded in an attack by Japanese soldiers who shot them or used their swords and bayonets on them as they fled from their burning homes after the troops had set fire to the buildings.

Reports have been received of the burning of Christian churches in three other villages and Koreans told The Associated Press correspondent at Seoul that they could show him nine villages which had been burned by the Japanese.

Details of the massacre at Cheam-ni were obtained by The Associated Press correspondent who visited that place in company with Raymond S. Curtice, the American vice-consul at Seoul and Mr. Underwood, an American missionary. Subsequently the correspondent again visited the place with Mr. Royds, the British consul and several missionaries including the Rev. Heron Smith, who is in charge of the Methodist Church in Korea. Describing his visit to Cheam-ni the Seoul correspondent writes that when they asked residents of nearby villages why that hamlet had been burned they were told that it was because there was a Christian church and many native Christians in the village.

"When we got to the place which had been a village of about 40 houses we found only four or five standing, all the rest were smoking ruins," he continued. "We found a body frightfully burned and twisted lying in a compound and another, either of a young man or woman just outside the church compound. Several groups of people were huddled under little straw shelters on the hillside with a few of their pitiful belongings about them. They were mostly women, some old, others young mothers with babies but all sunk in the dull apathy of abject misery and despair. Mr. Underwood, an American missionary who talked to them in their own language, brought the story of what had happened.

"The day before we arrived soldiers came to the village and ordered all the male Christians to gather at the church. When about 20 were in the church the soldiers opened fire on them with rifles and then entered the church and finished them off with swords and bayonets. After this they set fire to the church and to houses which otherwise would not have been burned."

One Korean told the correspondent he was alive because he was not a Christian and was not in the church. Later when the correspondent made a second trip to Cheam-ni with Mr. Royds, the British consul and a party of seven including several missionaries, he said, "we photographed freely without interference but when we started to talk to the natives a policeman would saunter up and the Korean would 'freeze up.' They were in fear of what might happen later if they were seen talking to us."

The party however, divided up and obtained many interviews concerning the story as the correspondent learned it on his first visit. They were told that two of those killed in or near the church were women who went to that building to learn what was happening to their husbands.

The party headed by the British consul then visited Soochun and found the village had been burned. The Koreans told the visitors that they were awakened in the night by finding their houses on fire. When they ran out they were struck with swords and bayonets or shot. Nine were killed but several were wounded, and we saw one man whose arm had been laid open with a sword. A church and 30 houses had been burned here but no attempt had been made to clean up the others.

The Rev. Stacy L. Roberts, an American Presbyterian missionary stationed at Pyeng Yan, has issued a statement asserting that more than 100 Koreans were shot or beaten to death in Tyung-ju and a church there was burned by Japanese.

In another village eight miles away another Christian church and an academy for boys were burned by Japanese soldiers after the contents such as benches, stoves and mats were carried away and put to use in the government school at Tyung-ju.
