THE MEN WE KNOW.

[From the Greenville News.]

Men are much given to talking of the mysteries and queer complications of the feminine character; but do we ever think much of the contradictions composing the average man?

He is so strong that he will maintain at any cost against direct pressure a position he has taken; so weak that he will yield to any one of a thousand little temptations with full knowledge that the yielding means always danger and sometimes harm beyond remedy.

He is so generous that he will share all he has with his friend and devote the utmost patient efforts for the pleasure or comfort of those he loves; so selfish that he will not deny himself in many things the smallest indulgences even when they conflict with what he knows to be his duty.

He is so brave that he will freely endanger his life or limbs in the service of his friends or the defence of his principles; so cowardly that he can be driven from almost any duty by a breath of ridicule or a few words of persuasion.

He will work with the patience, strength and docility of a cart horse in doing his duty to his family and become for some small thing as irritable and disagreeable and nearly as vicious as a wild animal.

He will preach and practice the loftiest sentiments of duty and manhood for years and allow him to be drawn from them all by a bit of well placed flattery or something else as empty and unimportant.

He will conduct his affairs with sagacity and prudence and of a sudden allow himself to be made a fool of by somebody with half his sense or caught with a hook so bare that the most hopeless idiot would turn from it.

He will suspect and distrust everybody for years and then show the simplicity and gullibility of a child in some matter involving his most important interests.

The list might be extended infinitely. Space could hardly be found to recite the familiar illustrations of how strangely the men we know combine glorious strength and miserable weaknesses, splendid courage and abject cowardice, wisdom and folly, generosity and meanness, bigness and littleness.

And a remarkable fact is that the men in whom these contrasts are sharpest are the men whom other men love. There appears to be an instinct in human nature to lavish its affection on those in whom that nature is most strongly developed.

It is a sad fact that the men without visible faults, foibles or weaknesses are rarely popular among other men, or—strange to say—among women either. There is a natural tendency to suspect those free of visible blemishes of having secret ones; and a natural resentment against those who appear to be better than their fellow men.

We have been speaking of average men. Fortunately for the world, there have been, and are and will be men above the average—men who by effort and courage eliminate the weakness, correct the evil and develop the strength and good of their nature. They attain what we call a symmetrical character and tower above their fellows too high for envy or resentment to reach, receiving only love and admiration where lesser men who compromise on the mere moralities or by abandoning all virtues but some respectable ones on which the evil of their natures is concentrated receive but dislike and suspicion.

By "respectable virtues" we mean those which avoid direct conflict with the ten commandments and the statute laws while violating the principles of right, justice and manhood—avarice, extortion, deceit sharp practice, small tyranny.

General Lee is the finest, most prominent and most familiar illustration we have of the symmetrical character and its power. He has endured the trial of history better than any man history tells of. His grandeur grows, his light shines more purely and brighter as they are tested and searched and tried by time and analysis. The love and reverence for him that lived among the men he led have come down to the following generations and are spreading through the world. He was as free of small vices as of great ones and no secret sin marred the splendor of his life. But General Lee was not the only man of his kind in his generation, and there are others like him, thank Heaven.

Most of us here in the South know of some of his "boys" who followed his lead in war and some who have followed his majestic spirit into the great beyond; and no doubt in the other armies of the South and North there were men of his kind as there are men of his kind scattered through the world to-day.

We do not find them at our elbows; the assemblages we see are not composed of them; but they are in almost every neighborhood and community, God's leaven distributed through the mass of humanity.

Sometimes they are very poor and humble men, accepting meekly and with sublime patience and courage what we call misfortunes; sometimes they are men enduring triumphantly the yet harder test of prosperity and what we call good fortune. They are in all ranks, stations and occupations—in the pulpit, in the counting-room or lawyer's office or doctor's, plowing in the fields, wielding hammer, axe or plane—wherever they are or whatever they do, high or low, famous or unknown, rich or poor, they have established character and command from their fellow men respect in which there is no envy, love free of the sense of comradeship in weakness. A colorless character is not a symmetrical character any more than a Chinese dwarf tree is a symmetrical tree, even though it has all the branches, twigs and leaves of a tree. The men we speak of are warm with the love of humanity, and are aggressive forces for good, shirking no issues or responsibilities, meeting their duties as men and citizens as well as their duties as Christians, holding themselves free from the world's spots and dirt while doing their part in the world, standing high above the sins great and small that distort the characters of other men, not holding themselves free from fellow-ship with the lowest and vilest or released from the obligation of tolerance for the weakest and poorest.

The man below the average is despicable; the average is despicable; the average man with all his faults is lovable, and the noble elements of his character win our respect as the baser ones command our toleration. The man with the symmetrical character receives our reverence as well as our love. He is a victor over himself. His course is glorious and worthy of emulation, offering the highest of ideals for those who aspire for something higher, better and more noble than the pleasure of the day or the gratification of the appetites. His end is peace, and his memory is as honor and his reward is more splendid than human standards can measure or human minds can conceive.

Don't rub the eyes except with your elbow.

Don't attempt to clean the ears with anything but the tip of the little finger.

Don't attempt to remove hardened ear wax by picking it out. If you cannot reach a physician when hardened ear wax becomes troublesome or painful, you may gently inject (by means of a fountain syringe) warm water, to each point of which half an ounce of bicarbonate of soda has been added.

Don't allow yourself to become habitually constipated. Coax intestinal action by regularity of habit, exercise, fresh and stewed fruits and the avoidance of constipating food.

Don't believe that eating fat will make you fat; quite the contrary holds true.

Don't eat gamey meats; remember that "gamey" is the hyper refined word for rotten.

Don't try to check a diarrhoea suddenly.

"Don't pour a mouthful of coffee into an empty stomach, even if you must tear a button from your coat and swallow it before," says an Arabic proverb. This applies to tea as well.

Don't attempt to remove foreign bodies from the upper part of the windpipe by trying to reach them with instruments of any kind. Try to give a violent blow on the back immediately after the accident. If this does not succeed, have the patient held suspended by the feet, head downward, and moved rapidly from side to side while you strike between the shoulders with the palm of the hand. Stop this at once if the patient shows evidences of suffocation. If these continue or the foreign body is not dislodged send for a surgeon to perform tracheotomy laryngotomy as quickly as possible.

It is impossible for a boy to keep still if he is ordered to do so, but if the suggestion is made that he should go down to the cellar for a hod of coal, he can become as motionless as an Egyptian mummy.—Boston Courier.

SOME PRACTICAL DON'TS.

Don't give a child any sweets except molasses candy or chocolate caramels, and these very rarely.

Don't permit a child under five to remain out of bed after eight p.m. even if you have to forego social duties you think most sacred!

Don't think that a child needs food each time it manifests hunger. Try to assuage its thirst by several teaspoonfuls of boiled and cooled water.

Don't hold a child in convulsions in your arms, but strip it quickly and immerse it to the neck in a hot bath, to which a tablespoonful of mustard may be added.

Don't allow a patient with colic to suffer until the physician arrives; give large injections (two quarts of warm water with ten drops, adult dose, of tincture of opium).

Don't seek relief for burns by the use of cold water; if nothing else is obtainable use warm water; better still, keep the part wet with sweet or linseed oil.

Don't lose your head when with cases of bleeding from the lungs; they very rarely prove immediately fatal. Prop the patient up in bed; and give him small pieces of ice to swallow, and fifteen drops of tincture of ergot (no sugar of lead or acid) every hour, until your physician arrives.

Don't imagine that sunstroke (heat prostration) follows exposure to the sun exclusively. The same may be produced by excessive heat even at night, especially when the person is much fatigued, or in a crowded room.

Don't eat pork. When it is absolutely unavoidable to do so it should be rendered harmless by being thoroughly cooked by a strong fire.

Don't allow meat and vegetables to be placed in the same compartment of the refrigerator.

Don't wear high heels. Women who wear them publicly advertise the fact that they seek or wish to maintain serious internal troubles.

Don't mistake weight for warmth in clothing. Feeble people may be worn down by heavy clothing and yet be less sheltered than those who wear light woollen fabrics, both as inner and outer garments.

Don't read, write or do any delicate work unless receiving the light from above and over the shoulder. Don't read in street cars or other jolting vehicles.

Don't attempt to clean the ears with anything but the tip of the little finger.

Don't attempt to remove hardened ear wax by picking it out. If you cannot reach a physician when hardened ear wax becomes troublesome or painful, you may gently inject (by means of a fountain syringe) warm water, to each point of which half an ounce of bicarbonate of soda has been added.
