Speech of Congressman Tillman.

Mr Chairman, Gentlemen of the Convention and Fellow Citizens:-For the eighth time in succession have I had the proud gratification to receive the nomination of the people of this district for Congress. To say that I am grateful and proud of it would be to tell the simple truth. To be chosen so often as ty, to serve longer than any other congressman in this State a district this district, or for both. I am not vain enough to take this display of regard of my ability, and under no circumstances betray your trust.

What adds to this gratification is that I have been chosen during most trying times. We have just come out of a war. We have been plundered ever since we were conquered, but all tunately we have an unfortunate race | bug. in our midst; whom our enemies have sought to raise to our standard, or rather level us to theirs. I am sorry to say bute to the conqueror and survive. The harder the agricultural class works, the high taxes you must pay to go out in pensions. High taxes don't impoverish a people provided they are spent among the people who pay them, but when or three others were put upon the they are paid out to another people legislative committee at the St. Louis the one who receives grows richer. The Modern Girl Must Knew a Little of Everything. [Mrs. Sylvanus Reed, in October Scribner.] The conditions of modern life in this great and growing country are such that the average American girl of more favored circumstances may step from the school-room, generally before she is twenty years old, into a station where the demands of domestic, social, charit able, and practical affairs leave her little time for further systematic study, and yet tax every resource of her store of knowledge and acquirement. If. then, she is confronted with subjects of which she is ignorant, but which she should have acquired at least a speakmay justly reproach her teachers that they have adopted the mistaken policy this article "Personal," in the hope of educating a girl who was to leave at that you may give my words the same twenty on the plan requiring a continuance at school till at least twenty-three. you. Though many have doubted the possibility to provide for this active and proper demand, without compromise which is unfair to thoroughness, and which will not result in superficiality.
