WOMEN OF THE SOUTH. One Who Once Queered It Over Hundreds of Slaves...

[From the Philadelphia News.] My text is the South woman of a generation ago...

One notable respect in which she has the advantage of the woman of antebellum days is the lack of prudishness...

I do not mean to say that in any instance she is treated with less gentle deference than were Southern women of yore...

Not even "the censorious world" now objects to her going alone with her escort to a ball or the theatre...

And the girl of to-day is superior to her mother in that she has had and profited by the advantages of adversity.

We have the advantage in summer dressing because our climate is largely summer, and the Southern woman is in her glory...

And it is not alone with her wardrobe that she has to contrive and economize; there seems to be three ends to everything that has to make do...

I once dropped in on a friend for dinner, with a lot of other unexpected company. Our welcome was warm and our hostess presided like a gracious queen over her scant dinner.

Our little hostess turned a half dozen different colors, but laughed as she replied: "Well, George, just put him in a dish and bring him in."

olly administered. Slanders say of her that she is "boss." Well, probably she does own her little room, but if you don't look her better than she will never find it out for himself.

Now I will tell you something on her which she will surely to deny vehemently, but it is only the truth which hurts, and you may believe what I say.

But this "meddlesomeness" I don't find a better word, does not denote a fault. As she is generally well read and sensible, she is often a good adviser, and a methinks manages a large business when her lady husband is absent.

Meeting the lady's husband on the street one day the New York lawyer said to him: "Look here, Brown, if you will just stop down and out and leave your wife the presidency of this company this enterprise will succeed."

It was only a short time ago that I heard a prominent politician of Alabama say that to his daughter who is over all his success in life. Her sisters all over this land may share with her the grand and simple truth traced on her monument: "After children rise up and call her blessed; her husband alas!"

Fearing that what I have said in regard to the social freedom of our women may convey the impression that it has brushed from them the bloom of modesty, I call the South to witness that they stand side by side with their mothers in true womanliness.

Now if any of my sisters or cousins or aunts recognize themselves in the foregoing remarks and take umbrage thereat, they have only to lie low and keep dark and watch a chance to retaliate on me.
