THE WELLFORD TRAGEDY

State Constables in Town With the Hope of Getting Bail for Massey.

The early gardener is at work in Newberry, but the thermometer still nounced it a case of killing while re-

Massey came here for the purpose of securing bail and being released. It was expected that Solicitor Schumpert was here and that court was in session and that there would be no trouble in securing the desired bail. Upon finding out that Solicitor Schumpert was not in the city Mr. Fant went to see Justice Pope about the matter and was told their Winchesters on the streets of by him that he would not entertain Newberry, as this is a peaceful and the application for bail until the Solicilaw abiding town and these are sup- tor was notified of the proposed action or proper notice had been served upon him. He, however, suggested that Walter H. Hunt, Jr., might act for the Solicitor in his absence, and the coustables in consequence went to see Mr. Hunt. He consented in the absence of Solicitor Schumpert to represent the State in the matter. Then the constables were puzzled about getting a lawyer to prepare the requisite papers with which to get before Justice Pope on habeas corpus. Telegrams were sent to the Attorney General as to what had better be done, and Chief Constable Fant was advised to secure a lawyer. Mr. J. F. J. Caldwell was first seen about the matter, but advised the constables that they
