SOLICITOR SEASE COMMENDED.

The following is from the Anderson Daily Mail:

Solicitor Sease has done the right thing in getting a special term of court to try the rapist in Newberry County. If the people were assured of speedy trials in such cases there would be absolutely no excuse for lynchings.

And the following is from the Spartanburg Daily Journal:

The special term of court ordered to try a rapist in Newberry is the correct way to handle such cases. It carries out the forms of the law and also furnishes that speedy administration of justice, which outraged public sentiment demands.

It is true as both these contemporaries say that the speedy administration of justice in cases of this character is necessary in order to let the public understand that the law is strong and sufficient to deal with even the most revolting of crimes and to give stern justice to the most degraded of criminals and then there can be no excuse for resort to lynch law. The regular term of court for this county does not come until the first of August.

GOOD ROAD ASSOCIATION.

A good road convention, which recently met in Columbia, and in which our supervisor took a leading part, passed a resolution requesting each county in the State to immediately organize a good road association.

Supervisor McBride has called a meeting at Florence to organize such an association for this county, for Monday, the 16th day of March, at 10 o'clock a. m. Owing to the fact that the county court house will be occupied by the Circuit Court on that day, the meeting will be held in the Florence city council chamber. Supervisor McBride, whose whole heart is in this great work of bettering the condition of our county roads, earnestly urges all persons in the county who are in any way interested in good roads to be present.—Florence Reform Advocate.

The good work is going on in each county and we hope the sentiment will so crystallize by the next session of the legislature that the members may understand that the people are willing to have good roads even though they cost something. We do not want to see Newberry behind in this great reform movement. Let us agitate and give our representatives to understand that we want ways and means devised by which we can secure some road work that will be worth something. There is not a man in this county who travels the roads at all who would be unwilling to pay five or ten dollars a year for good roads, and it would be the best investment he could make. And those who live in town and seldom travel the roads would be willing to help pay for them because it would be a good investment for them.

Our contemporary, The Observer, published a local short time ago in which it spoke of the price of mules, and estimated that the amount spent for mules up to this time this season "will foot up from $75,000 to $85,000." And the following statement was made: "With good roads farmers could save $25 to $50 apiece on the first cost of their mules." The bad roads making it impracticable to do the hauling with small mules. This is all too true and yet this would be only a very small part of the saving which would come to the farmers by good roads. Good roads would put them nearer to market and make it practicable for the farmer who lived ten to fifteen miles from the court house to sell his eggs and butter and chickens and vegetables and other things he might grow on his farm at a profit because he would lose less time in going to and from the court house.

Now, then, why not join hands and help us to show the people the importance and advisability and the business judgment of issuing county bonds and getting the money with which to build and permanently improve the public highways. It is the only way by which we can get any results and will take no more taxes than to go along patching year after year. The farmers could make no better investment than money put in permanent road work. It will pay the towns and cities and all others whether farmers or not. If we could only get started and do a little road building there would be no trouble in carrying on the work. It is the most important question before us now.

The constables are beginning to get a taste of the strenuous life in Charleston and we are getting back to a condition of things like the early days of the dispensary regime.—Charleston Post.

We hope the efforts of the "strenuous life" of the constables will have better results than those obtained in "the early days of the dispensary regime."

In those days only a man shot now and then and a number of cases, "no bills" by the grand jury, and we never heard of a conviction, and the tigers went on doing business and received the patronage of the people of the city.

Delegate International Roads Convention.

Hon. E. H. Aull, of this city, has been appointed one of ten delegates from South Carolina to the National and International Good Roads Convention to be held in St. Louis, Mo., April 27th to May 2nd, of this year. The appointments were made by Mr. F. H. Hyatt, President of the South Carolina Good Roads Association, at the request of Hon. W. H. Moore, of St. Louis, President of the National Good Roads Association. The sessions of the Association will occupy the first three days of the week of the Dedicatory Services of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

NEWBERRY COLLEGE NIGHT.

Rev. W. L. Seabrook's Scholarly and Forceful Address to the Students at the Lutheran Church.

Sunday evening was the regular monthly "Newberry College Night" at the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer. There was a full attendance of the students of the college and members of the congregation and people of the city generally. Excellent music was furnished by a choir composed of college students.

The address by the pastor, Rev. W. L. Seabrook, as is usual on these occasions, was delivered more especially to the college students. It was a scholarly effort, full of thought clothed in beautiful language, and at the same time plain and practical, and calculated to reach the heart of the listener. His subject was, "Lessons from the Life of a Young Man." He placed before his audience the young man Joseph as an exemplar of a great life, and of a life worthy of study and emulation, telling of the lessons which this great life teaches.

The book of human life, he said, no less than the Book of God, is full of interest and worthy of study, and when we find the record of a life in the Book of God—the two together—it is of especial value. The young man of whom he was to speak tonight was an upright son and citizen, a wise ruler, an humble, faithful Christian—the young man Joseph. He wished simply to speak of some of the lessons to be drawn from the life of this young man. He was a young man who, in spite of the favoritism of an indulgent father and the envy of an older brother, had within him a character which made it impossible to spoil him.

The speaker recounted the incident of Joseph's dream, how in his dream Joseph and his brethren were binding sheaves in the field, "and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and behold, your sheaves stood round about and made obeisance to my sheaf;" and of his other dream, "Behold, I have dreamed a dream more, and behold, the sun and moon and eleven stars made obeisance to me." The speaker said he thought that Joseph told these dreams in his innocence more than in a spirit of vain-glory. He was a dreamer, but he was not only a dreamer. He dreamed of greatness, but while he dreamed he did not neglect the nearest duties. Dreams alone do not make a man great. Often dreams keep a man from being great. Many a man who, by humble, patient faithfulness in little things might have attained to greatness, has found his life drifting into the commonplace and himself taking, in spite of his dreams, a position and a situation in life which makes his passing away unknown to his fellows. Many a man's life has been wrecked by dreaming, but if while dreaming you are still true to the nearest duties those dreams will after awhile be the inspiration to the highest success.

It was a dark day for Joseph when by his envious brothers he was cast into the pit and betrayed into the hands of the Ishmaelites. When he went from great wealth to the station of a slave. A dark day is just as dark to a good man as to one who is not a true man, though for the good man the clouds will soon roll away. How did Jacob act? Perhaps there were dark thoughts in his mind, perhaps there were bitter tears in his eyes, but if so he said nothing about it. Even as a slave he was a successful man. "Slave—prosperous!" it sounds like a paradox! This is one of the lessons. There's no paradox in it. A man's happiness and success and prosperity do not depend on outward circumstances. A great writer has said that a farmer who has to go out to consult the weather to see if he is going to make a good crop, or the man who has to consult his bank book to see if he is prosperous, hasn't learned the first principles of true happiness and prosperity. Joseph lived not in his mere environment; he was living with God, external circumstances were under his feet, he was a man and he was triumphing over them. He may have felt the hardness of his lines, but God was with him and kept before him the dream of his boyhood days, of the bowing sheaves and sun and stars, and within him the thought that one day his dream would be realized. A boy who had been faithful in his father's house was faithful in the house of his master.

Faith is everything, said the speaker, and faithfulness will win, if you begin your faithfulness with the little things and continue it all along the way. Joseph's faith was known by his life. The world is looking at us and that is the way the world tells. Faith in God must be lived. Though the professions are crowded, there never has been a day in the history of the nation or of the world when there was greater opportunity for young men, if they are young men of integrity, of faith in God and who live that faith, young men who are true to their own manhood, who are true to that which is true. The young man the world wants is a young man of faith, and the opportunity is present if the young man will but learn the lesson that faithfulness in little things leads to faithfulness in the great.

The speaker traced the life of Jacob, speaking of temptations through which he passed successfully, of the moral crisis which was passed, making to the tempter a response in the single word, God, the only way in which any temptation can be met; of his faithfulness during his prison life, when there was no one with him but God; of his life when suddenly elevated to the dizzy height of power. He had been tested and had come forth pure gold. Would he stand this other test? Many a man has stood the test of poverty and then in a mansion has forgotten the God of his boyhood days. Though Joseph was next to Pharaoh in power, he forgot not his God. He was true to Him. He was true to the teachings of his mother who loved him and the father whom he loved, and he was able to show himself the man upon the throne that he had been in prison. The need of us all is that principle of fidelity to our own manhood and faithfulness to God shown in our faithfulness in the doing of the little things of life. One by one applying the lessons make the application for yourself. In business, in home life, in the duties which come to us in the busy rounds, whatever they may be, "faithful in the least and I will make you a ruler over many things" are the words of the scripture itself. Temptations can only be overcome with the strength of the mighty God of Jacob. He of whom it can be said, God is with him, lives the successful life, he who puts his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and trusts Him.

Read what this gentleman says: "Capt. D. W. Welch, keeper of the Wood County Infirmary, Parkersburg, W. Va., says: 'I had to go around trying to evade pain constantly, aware that a false step, jerk or twist would bring punishment, and I was afraid to handle anything for fear of a reminder in the shape of a twinge of pain. I tried at Dr. J. N. Murdoch's drug store on Third street, and have something to get in the drug line every time I come out. It was the relief I learned about Dan's Kidney Pills and I took a supply home with me and used them. My wife used them and my sister, Mrs. A. Amick, of No. 615 Seventh street, used them. I cured the three of us, I am here in the city every few days and can vouch for the remarks I have made.'"
