Winter Grazing
Do you have livestock?
If so, have you seeded your winter grazing yet?

Clemson says to have it good you need to seed it as early in September as possible.

You know, this winter grazing thing is one of our biggest advantages over the rest of the country with livestock. And I mean all sorts of livestock.

In a 3-year experiment at Clemson they made good fat beef cheaper on winter grazing alone than on dry lot feeding of grain and roughage. But it has to be good grazing. And that calls for fertilizer under it and top dressing on it both in the fall and late winter.

In this experiment 20 pounds of crimson clover and 40 pounds of rye grass were seeded together per acre. On lands not so well suited to clover, Hugh Woodlee, our pasture man, tells me both oats and rye are good. They should be seeded at twice the usual rate and separately. The rye will come in first. Gator is a new variety of rye that's showing up good, and Abruzzi is our old standby.

To get this winter grazing, that our section of the country can afford to brag about, we've got to seed it early. Then it can get well established and make a good growth before cold weather comes. For after that, late planted grain just doesn't grow and make a turf until weather starts warming up in late winter and early spring. And then you don't have what you aimed at, winter grazing.

Silage Piled in Pastures
County Agent Tate of Jasper showed me how Cypress Woods Plantations puts up silage for their cattle. They just pile and pack it out in the pastures and cover it with plastic. A temporary fence keeps cattle from bothering it until it is needed. Then it is hoisted over the fence into troughs. He said it keeps perfectly.

Killing Scrub Trees
In Barnwell they have been getting good results in killing out undesirable forest trees by injecting them with 2-4-5T mixed with kerosene. County Agent Griffith told me the 11 injectors in the county were kept busy. Ten of these are privately owned and one belonged to his office is rented out at 75¢ a day.

They kill out the old "crow" trees so as to release the little pines that have been set or volunteered near them.

Our forester, Bill Barker, tells me there are over 50 of these injectors in use over the state now, and generally satisfactory results are being gotten. The extension foresters and county agents have demonstrated their use in all parts of the state.

Farming trees! Yes, this is getting the weeds out.

BOYS, ARE THAT WAY

By J. M. ELEAZER

The country blacksmith at the foot of the hill below our house, where the road forked, is a vivid part of my childhood memories.

It was from his flaming forge that I saw my first sparks fly, the first mule shoe, and the first tire shrunk. He made the grain cradles for most of the Fork. He ordered the blades from C. D. Franke & Co. at Charleston. But all of the rest of it he made. The sneads were made from: cured ash saplings he found down on the creek.

He selected the right ones, with slight crooks near the ground, just right for a cradle. He saved the fingers out of three-quarter inch hardwood boards by hand and sandpapered, polished and varnished them until they were as smooth as glass. The braces, rods, and small metal fittings he made himself. And when he finished with a cradle it was a real work of art. I liked to watch him shoe mules and horses. I feared their heels and thought he was a powerful and brave man to ease up against the meanest one, gradually raise its hind leg, stretch it back, and imbed it in his groin. The critter might try to rear or kick then, but to no avail. He could successfully wrestle with him then, for he had a mechanical advantage the way he had his hind leg hooked there.

And I liked to watch him shrink wagon and buggy tires. Young folks now possibly know nothing about that. But you how the metal tires would get loose on the wooden rims during dry weather and when it was hot. They stretched more than the wood, and that made them loose. And a wheel would soon go to pieces in that shape. It was that tight tire on it that braced it and gave it "dish" and strength.

He would take the tires off, measure them and the rim to see how much too big they were, and he'd cut the tire and weld it back right. After that he would lay the tires on top of each other on bricks, build a fire over them, and heated them. When they were almost red hot, he'd pull the fire away, grab one with his tongs and hurry in onto the waiting wheel that lay on a special frame that would hold it for him. The rim would smoke and catch fire at places before he could hurry the wheel over a trough of water. I liked to turn it for him and see it

Students Spend Week At Beach

The college students of Aveleigh Presbyterian Church spent last week at a spiritual retreat at Windy Hill Beach. The purpose of the retreat was to afford time and leadership for the students to better understand themselves and the problems facing the world, as these problems and issues are to be faced within the ethical concept of Christianity. After periods of private meditation and devotion, the group was led into a consideration of the development and application of Christian attitudes toward some of the major problems of life. Another purpose of the retreat was to enable the student to better understand himself and how to face the personal issues of life with greater confidence.

Careful consideration was given to the subjects discussed in other conferences attended by members of the group in order that a balanced view could be obtained, for it was recognized that the average conference, however objective the original effort, does not fairly represent the various facts of a problem. Mr. James Felker, an official of Riegel Textiles and a resident of New Jersey, lead a discussion on Labor-Management. Miss Sydney Patrick, Director of Christian Education at Aveleigh, and Dr. N. E. Truesdell led the other discussions.

The leaders expressed keen satisfaction with the maturity with which the students considered the personal and social problems confronting them and the world. Dr. Truesdell said, "the future is much brighter than many think it is, with such a strong personal Christian conviction on the part of many of our college students."

Long, Low and Lovely

The long, low appearance of this modern ranch style home is accentuated by the big two-car carport. Carefully planned "traffic" lanes make all rooms easily accessible from others.

Among the many outstanding features are the large living room with fireplace, separate dining room, abundance of closets, and large storage room at rear of carport.

There are two full baths, one private to the master bedroom.

The wide overhanging eaves and covered entry are convenient shelter from Southern sun and showers.

Plans for this attractive home may be ordered.
