COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 17th, 1872. Editor Orangeburg Times :

I notice in the Orangeburg "News" of the 14th instant, affidavits reflecting some what upon my integrity and veracity, I therefore take the liberty of sending you this letter for publication as a vindica tion of myself. In reply to the affidavits made, I desire to say only one thingthat the matter contained in them is ut terly untrue. I have been connected editorially with the "News," and wrote numerous articles for the same, while oc cupying that position. I was recognized as the Editor by the printers, 'notwith standing the contradictory affiidavits they made. I was told on taking charge of the paper, by one of the owners thereof, that he recognized me as the sole Editor of the paper, and that I should be respected and obeyed accordingly. Hoping this will satisfy my friends as to my truthfulness in the matter.

world which is to come, all have brought to the old man, in his arduous task, a smile of unalloyed warm happiness. In our world, the world of limit and of measure, the clocks are on the stroke of twelve: and in the momentary pause the old man sits upon the ever vergant banks of the river, and talks half sadly with the spirited boy so soon to succeed bint. What think you says he? He tells him that the days of time are numbered-that he too, soon, like himself, will turn over the rope to one as bou-yant as he, and that then he will find himself a gray old man-worn, not with toil, but with a heart ache barn of the bitter regrots of worldlings too lato repentaut., He points to his grey hairs as the badges of his grier, and to his bent form as the evidence of the struggle between his duty to carry and his desire to gield to the appeals of the damned souls, for yet a little respite on the green banks, yet a little respite to finish up their task, to repent, perchance to pray, oftimes to gather the oddstand ends of their good intentions for the eternity upon, which they now approach, and send them by the other way to God-by the cross. Too late it is the old man knew, but he pauses kindly to explain, and the eddy takes the old man and his wherry, and the brawny arms are knit and worn in the struggle to regain the right course. "His manner and tone now 'change as he takes up the theme of the many happy souls from whom he has gathered warmth and cheer in his dreary work. The kindness of the old man's heart beams from his eyes, and he rises to leave his charge with the hope that he may often have with him the burden of a happy soul and a clear conscience; and when such are rot his companions, that he might be able to find within himself a fund of charity for the comfort and support of the misled. For, says he, these locks now snowed with the grey of sorrow will, when that in mother earth, return to their former hue, and these worn arms will rise in the image of our maker, while a clear conscience and tender hear has served but to mellow the outlines of the vigorous man.

He went at the stroke of 12, and now the young man, vigorous in the prime of youth, has hold the wherry. He is kindly of heart my friends, soft to the maideni and to the infirm kind. Upon the sorrow-sick patient, and a never failing nurse. Hand in hand with energy, he works success, and points with hope to the prize we would have. It behooves us only to aim at what is right, and make pure efforts, in all of which we must pray lina, for the best Southern Agricultural

Our Christmas number of the Times we let go by in accordance with medical advice. Our rebel comrades in arms will acknowledge the force of the certificate. We were on furlough as editor and school master. Our leave of absence has expired, and we are again at the service of our patrons and their children.

The able diver connected with the Louisville Courier-Journal, goes down into his inner consciousness for this : "A Georgian, bent on suicide, jumped into the river three times, from a ferry beat at Sayannah the other day, and way as often fished out by a negro man who happened to be on board. Why the officers of the boat should thus have suffered the negro to interfere so persistently in the private affairs of a gentleman, is a thing that somehow, or other we can't understand."

A RUMPUS IN THE RADICAL RING .-We have going on to-day (Thursday) a trial under the civil rights bill. Mr. Wahlers, under whose charge a billiard saloon has been recently opened, in our midst, we understand, refused to allow some colored men to drink at the bar at tached. He was indicted forthwith. Mr. DeTreville represents Wahlers and Mr. Knowlton the colored men. Mr. Wahlers keeps another bar-room two squares farther down the street and allows colored men to drink there, but we understand the saloon is a club arrangement.

Christmas was probably the most quiet and inclement day of the last year in our town. Sleet and rain and cold winds prevailed, and kept almost every one within doors, and those few who ventured out looked as if they felt that they would like to be elsewhere.

New year day is mild and pleasant as laughingly and brightly as could be desired. The streets are lively with people and all seem pleasantly employed.
