

Carriage Factory.

The undersigned respectfully informs the public that he is prepared to do all

Kind of Work in the above line on the shortest notice and at

Living Prices.

HORSESHOEING done in the best possible manner.

I also have in full operation my PLANING AND MOULDING MACHINES,

And GRIST MILL.

All work in this line done without delay and on reasonable terms.

A share of the public patronage is solicited.

July 25 H. RIGGS.

CALL AT THE PEOPLE'S BAKERY

Established in 1871 by the Proprietor, who is still ready and willing to fill orders in

BREAD, ROLL, PIES

CAKES

Of all descriptions.

GUNTERS

By the BARRYL or BOX.

BREAD

For Camp Meetings or any other kind of Meetings.

Fresh Confectionaries, Fancy Goods and Notions

Which will be sold as low as any that can be bought in Orangeburg.

Thankful for the past patronage of my friends and the public I still solicit a continuance of their custom.

T. W. ALBERTSON.

Russell Street, next door to the Court House.

Sept 11, 1878-ly

NEW STORE!

Having recently moved into the New Store, I would like to inform my old friends and acquaintances generally that I have now well equipped my store to keep on hand

Best Dressed

Best Hats and Caps

Fines

And in fact, everything that can be found in a first class

DRUG STORE!

I also occupy with my drug store, which is now fully equipped with all the latest and most improved machinery, and I am prepared to fill orders on the shortest notice.

A. C. DUKES, M. D.

Oct 21 1879

J. DEE ANDREWS,

would respectfully inform the Citizens of Orangeburg that he has been chosen the Stock and Finance of Z. J. King and Walter Cannon's Old Stand, Main Street, where he will be glad to serve his friends and the public with anything in his line of trade. Every thing fresh and pure and guaranteed to give satisfaction. A full line of GOODS kept constant on hand.

Born and raised in Orangeburg, I hope to receive a liberal share of the patronage of my fellow citizens.

J. DEE ANDREWS

July 21

F. DeMARS, Jr. gt.

UNDER MASONIC HALL Friends and Countrymen attend!

Do not wait until you spend every cent in places dear. Make DeMARS your Grocer here. Ask him for his HAM so nice. Running at the LOWEST PRICE! Stop and try his Flour so fine.

Cheese, and ALL things in his line! I have some BUTTER sent from the best dairies. Every man should have a pound! And if you'll feed well and cheap! Put his MACKEREL on your Table!

God are all things in his Store, Reason cannot be, for more! Only try his LIQUORS rare. Can't be equalled any where! Every man who knows DeMARS, rushes for his good Segars! In his Sample Room they fly, In very time that they are dry! Something tells them 'TIS the man!

And he always leads the van! Never yet did he retreat, Don't you know he can't be beat?

Look within his Store so grand, In his Bar-Room—near at hand! Question him and you will see—UNDERSOLD—HE CANNOT BE! Oh! will not till you are wiser, Reason points to Mr. RISER, Selling fancy Driks to all—

Give him then a general call, Rest assured, DeMARS sells cheap, And the finest goods will keep, Never cease to bless your stars—Down with all—except DeMARS.

THEODORE KOHN'S

MANMOTH STOCK OF

DRY GOODS

Is now in store.

All of my friends, customers and everybody will do well to call and examine the LARGEST ASSORTMENT of Goods ever exhibited in Orangeburg, which were purchased with the greatest care in regard to Style, Quality and Cheapness, in the Principal Cities North.

FASHIONABLE DRESS GOODS

comprises everything in Dress Fabrics. All the new Shades and Colors in Silks, Satins, Velvets, Cashmeres, Yarns, Cloths, Broadens, Alpaca's, and in fact everything that could be so desirable. This stock especially SURPASSES anything ever brought into the Burg. Come, take a look and be convinced.

FANCY GOODS, Cottons, Neck Wear, Ribbons, Corsets, Gloves, Ladies' Vests, Shawls, Cloaks, Zephyr, Zephyr Goods, Buttons, Jet Goods, Lace, Embroideries, &c. &c. in more than usual variety. Simply Grand, Gorgeous and Immense.

CASSIMERES, Jeans, Flannels, Cotton Goods, Calicoes, direct from the Factories, at the very LOWEST PRICES, and in the best Quality.

I am now the LOCAL AGENT for one of the Largest Philadelphia Silk Manufacturers, for Men, Ladies and Children's Hand Sewed Shoes, whose Stock is the Best to be found in the North. I also have Southern and Continental Goods, suitable for any style of Domestic Pocket.

CHILDREN'S SUITS and Hosiery in all the latest Styles.

TRUNKS and MILLION of other goods, which if you come to see, you will be sure to get the best at the lowest prices.

WATER PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

PROOF and WATER

MISSION OF LIFE.

Few thoughts flash upon the imagination of youth with more brilliancy than that life has a special mission. The young man in dream is the hero of a splendid drama, and the young lady floats into halls of luxury to the music of marriage bells. Quiet life is either life or death. But true life-work is not a mere to become the hero of an Epic, or a man conspicuous for genius or wealth or social power, as to drop noisily into the great current of good men, or to grow unseen as a headling leaf on the tree of humanity. There is far better than to fancy oneself to be the hero of an Epic, or a man conspicuous for genius or wealth or social power, as to drop noisily into the great current of good men, or to grow unseen as a headling leaf on the tree of humanity. There is far better than to fancy oneself to be the hero of an Epic, or a man conspicuous for genius or wealth or social power, as to drop noisily into the great current of good men, or to grow unseen as a headling leaf on the tree of humanity.

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

UNCONSCIOUS FAREWELLS.

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

Life is very critical. Any word which may be our last. Any farewell, even amid grief and mourning, may be forever. It is this truth which burns in our consciousness, and if it could be a deep conviction and not give a new meaning to all our human relationships? Would it not make us far more than we sometimes are? Would it not sometimes put a rebuke upon our abundant, impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the unbearable suspicions and jealousies that show so often embitter the hearts of our lovers? Would we not have a more profound respect for the lives of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstandings to build up strong walls between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels, year after year, which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass neighbors or old friends on the street with a recognition because of some wounding of pride, or some ancient grudge? Or, would we be so chary of our kind words, our commendations, our sympathies, our comfort, when our hearts are all about us breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

THE TEMPER'S VOICE.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

The people of the South may presently be confronted with a great temptation. Unless some existing signs fail, the administration of Mr. Garfield will seek to build up in this section a Republican party by selecting as its leaders and office-holders men of character who have better claims to loyalty than Long-reef or Mosby. General Garfield's friendly relations with quite a number of Southern Democrats are well known. It is now reported that with the advice of Mr. Conkling and other leading supporters, he will undertake to put the Federal service in the Southern States on an entirely new footing, selecting prominent and influential Southern men for the most important Federal offices, with a view to drawing into the Republican ranks, such men, on their guarantee that they and their friends will reorganize the party and make it a fair representation of a part of the property and intelligence of their State. The "Herald" correspondent at Washington, declares that the President elect desires to succeed in what Mr. Hayes called "that nothing is so near his heart as bringing about a natural condition of politics at the South." The new policy therefore, even with Mr. Conkling's consent, to repudiate the South by giving the Federal patronage to quite a different class of men than those selected by Mr. Hayes. Of course, acceptance of office involves party allegiance. The Republicans, it is also said, do not want to make another Presidential campaign upon sectional issues. Therefore, they want a respectable Republican party in the South.

WHAT ARE BOYS GOOD FOR?

The orphan who answered, "They are good to make men of," made an admirable reply. But the sort of men we are to have in a few years depends upon the sort of boys we have now. A man is but a grown up boy. The present crop of boys contain some hopeful specimens, who give promise of noble and useful manhood. But it also shows a large percentage of boys who must be reconstructed, before they can possibly develop into a manhood that can fill any honorable or useful position in society. Boys who shun or shirk useful work or improve in study, and spend their time in idle dissipation or vicious activities, can never become useful men. Boys who, being obliged to do something for their support, assiduously seek easy work, are not hopeful prospectives of manhood. They will never amount to much. When we see the tendency of city boys, to be industrious only in playing billiards or base ball, or in some other useless and demoralizing pursuit; and the disposition of country boys, to seek in the city for easier or more respectable employment than the country offers, we feel unhopeful of the future. It is from these two classes that the constantly increasing armies of shyster lawyers, quack doctors, preachers, bumper politicians, drunken loafers, petty thieves, tramps, dead-beats, and omni-genui, are chiefly recruited.