Sprague and Conkling.

Some time ago we announced upon a phase of society existing at the North which presented itself through the commission of certain heinous crimes against the dignity of the law and the morals of society. We notice the same phase cropping out in the recent scandal of the two individuals whose names head our article to-day. When it is considered that the spirit which prompts such deeds has its being in the highest plain of society, among the professions, the literary characters, high officials and leaders of fashion, one can very well understand the alarming extent of the evil and its dreadful effects upon every class even the lowest and meanest.

It is not long before the entire mass, constituting Northern society, will be corrupted and poisoned from top to bottom; the virus of which will be found lurking in the family circle, at social meetings, about legislative halls, in the issues of the press, and around the sacred altars of the church, thus reaching and poisoning distant communities. Southern society to-day feels this Northern virus trickling insidiously through every vein and artery of the body politic, attacking its vitals by a dangerous familiarity with the conditions and effects of evil. We see it in the every day walks of life whilst in contact with elements of every plain of society. Before the war a lady could travel throughout the length and breadth of our Southern land by car or boat and the best attention and comforts would be allowed her; now we often see in our crowded coaches ladies standing up and men enjoying their ease upon cushioned seats. Upon the crowded streets of cities ladies are jostled rudely from the sidewalk by unmanly men wearing the garb of gentlemen. In the family circle manifestations of rudeness and an unvarnished dallying or toying that treats virtue as a bagatelle, are becoming too frequent and familiar to the Southern eye.

Once virtue is successfully assailed and its downfall viewed with indifference, society is rotten. This attack is most effectively made by ministers of the Gospel, high officials, learned men and leaders of fashion who have been poisoned by contact with crime, until the commission of evil becomes an element or trait of character. So thoroughly may men become impregnated with vice that vicious conduct is but a natural consequence of a law which teaches the fact that evil tendencies are inherited—transmitted from father to son. It is useless to disguise the fact that our people have fallen from the high position in many of the substantial virtues that characterized our society before the war. This can only be intelligently accounted for by the introduction into our society of the virus that has poisoned the best elements of Northern society. God deliver us from further contact with such an evil.

The Silver Dollar.

The Secretary of the Treasury at Washington issued orders a few days ago that all Government employees must be paid ten per cent. of their salaries in the standard silver dollar. This order was obeyed at Washington, but some assert, however, that it may be construed to mean all Government employees throughout the country. When we reflect how many persons are in the employment of the government in every State and county, the vast amount of these dollars to be soon put upon the country, can be realized. It is said that the banks in Washington, and if true, it will be the case in every city, will not take them, which will have the effect of putting them on the trade at a ruinous discount. It matters not what may be the effect of this vast amount of silver upon the market, the mere fact of forcing the payment of its debts by the government in a currency that does not circulate at par, is discredit to the government as well as ruinous to the poor who are thus defrauded of a portion of their hard earnings. It were infinitely better to pay these creditors in a currency they might elect, than for the government to incur the charge of fraud. Such however will be the result of every policy not based upon honesty whether adopted by governments or individuals.

Editorial Notes.

We are indebted to Mr. John H. Dukes whose kindness afforded us the privilege of seeing his excellent crop on last Tuesday morning and enables us to lay before our readers a few notes on the preparation of the soil, manuring and cultivation of the crop which has produced for him one of the best crops in the county. We have noticed closely the different crops along the road of our travels during the past two months and, taking the number of acres (one hundred and ten of cotton and ninety of corn) in the count, it is the best average crop we have seen. It is agreed by every one who has visited Mr. Dukes' farm that the yield will be large both of cotton and corn, and no one has given him less than one hundred bales of cotton. Indeed when a crop is a fine average one, excellent in every field, it is impossible to tell how much will be made; the opposite is equally true, that when a crop is fine in one field, inferior in a second and poor in a third, the yield will be made to say how little will be made. According to our best judgment after seeing and walking through his different fields of cotton and corn, Mr. Dukes will realize at least a bale to every acre of cotton and twenty bushels to every acre of corn. The lands upon which this crop is made has been under cultivation for years. There is not a stump to be seen or the root of a tree to be encountered anywhere on the farm save a few of recent growth in a field or two of corn; and it is natural to suppose that, under the system of cultivation formerly pursued by our planters, the land was, at the beginning of his occupancy, eight years ago, impoverished in a greater or less degree according to locality—much of it would not yield at best more than two hundred pounds of lint per acre. By what method, therefore, these lands have been brought to their present extraordinary productiveness is a question of interest to the general farming public. When it is admitted, as it has been by many, that agriculture has assumed the proportions of a science and that remunerative success on the part of the farmer requires as much knowledge of speculative principles as a chemist does of his compounds or the jurist of law, the wonder is that so many men within a decade of years have arrived at their present knowledge of the great truths involved in the science. One must apply himself assiduously to the study of soil, the nature of plants and to the different modes of cultivation in order that he may realize the yield the full capacity of the soil would warrant. Mr. Dukes has certainly made wonderful proficiency in the study, as his successes for several years have attested. He may not understand the chemical affinity between soil and organic matter, but he does its results; he may not understand the great law by which food is appropriated by the plant and by which plants are produced, but he does its effect; and he may not understand the principle which controls the cooperation of atmosphere and soil in fertilization, but he does its condition. Practically then his remarkable yield is the result of deep study and thoughtful analysis.

As a consequence of this knowledge, he prepares his lands deep and well—heretofore with a long one-horse plow, but will hereafter use a two-horse plow as a matter merely of economy. His cultivation is thorough but shallow, working his crops once in ten days—some fields he has plowed eight times during this season—regulating the manner of working by the necessity of the crop and state of the weather.

His corn is manured all round with twenty bushels of cotton seed per acre, which will give him a general average of twenty bushels of grain per acre. His cotton is manured according to the productiveness of the land, using however an ample supply of stable manure on lands liable to rust. In one field he put six two-horse wagon loads of stable manure to the acre. This is his best field and will yield on some acres two bales per acre. In another he put the same amount of stable manure and cotton seed mixed. This is his second best field, but little, if any, inferior to the first. In a third, he used fifteen or sixteen bushels of cotton seed and seventy-five pounds each of Atlantic phosphate and acid; and in a fourth the same fertilizers except German Salt is used in the place of acid. In one barren belt, where the soil was too poor to pay for cultivation, most excellent cotton is produced by broadcast one-third more of stable manure to the acre. We will remark here that Mr. Dukes' pea crop is very unpromising which fact he attributes to constant manuring corn with cotton seed. Where this crop is planted alone it is fine.

We also inspected the crop of Mr. Wm. Dukes, son of Mr. John Dukes, who seems to have inherited his father's judgment, skill and foresight. He is destined to be a successful farmer. Adjoining this farm is that of Mr. W. H. Dukes, ex-Sheriff of our county, who appears to be as fine a farmer as he was a competent officer. We saw here some excellent corn and cotton, cultivated in the same manner as the above. His manuring differs from that of Mr. John Dukes in the rejection of phosphates and the use of common salt, which certainly is an admirable application on our lands subject to rust, as well as those of a different nature. This cotton is free from rust, green, growing and taking on fruit whilst the other is matured and fully ripe.

After spending the entire morning in this delightful as well as instructive manner, we returned to town feeling well paid for the time employed, and that our farmers will be greatly benefited by frequent visits to each others' farms, and by a familiarity with the different modes of preparation, manuring and cultivation adopted by successful farmers. Hence, in the absence of this we pencil these notes for the benefit of our friends.

St. Matthews Dots.

The upper portion of our town was thrown into a state of considerable excitement on Sunday night about 12 o'clock by an alarm of fire, which was found to be burning on the inside of Messrs. Chaplin & Bro.'s store. Fortunately one of the proprietors was sleeping in the store and gave the alarm in time to enable the citizens to stop the fire before any serious damage was done. The loss was slight. The fire was accidental.

Several of our merchants left this week for New York where they expect to purchase their fall stock, and one or two others are expected to leave at an early day. Orangeburg had better keep a close eye on her little sister, for the merchants here appear to be with renewed energy and vigor and are making preparations for a big fall trade.

Several of our merchants are getting ready to report several bales of cotton shipped from his point.

Our "O. S. Club," which consists of the ugliest men in our town, was considerably thinned out last winter, and I think from present prospects that their is a slight hope of their losing a few more of their number this winter. Those of them who remain as they now are until 1880, will have but little hope of future success, for the young ladies are not fond of marrying crusty, crabbed, homely, old bachelors who look like their papas.

The Schools.

The following communications, received from colored teachers, we publish because of their bearing upon the educational interest of our colored citizens:

Editor Orangeburg Democrat:
Allow me, sir, to state in your valuable paper that our worthy School Commissioner visited the schools last week in Elizabeth Township and, to our surprise, seemed to take great interest in speaking to the children on the subject of education. We were delighted with his kind advice concerning the moral conduct of the school, dwelling especially upon the duty of teachers to instruct the children about God and to do all they can to bring them up in His fear and admonition. Upon the whole, we must give our present School Commissioner great credit for taking so much interest in the colored children, as he seems to know their needs and is willing to supply them. Some time ago we were asked, if that "Democratic School Commissioner" recognized colored people? Our reply was emphatically: "Yes, more so than all the Radical Commissioners put together." Mr. Editor, the colored people are much surprised with the improvement in this particular that the Democratic Administration has made over those preceding it. We were told on last fourth of July that we were to have no more free schools beside one or two months, but time and experience tell us better.

COLORED TEACHER.

From a different section of the county we received the following:
Editor Orangeburg Democrat:
You will please allow me a little space in your valuable paper to express my gratitude to our worthy School Commissioner, Mr. D. L. Connor, for his kind attention and valuable instructions to both teachers and children. The colored schools seem to receive more attention from him, if that be possible, than the white schools. Under his direction I feel satisfied that the free schools will be greatly improved. The colored people say he is the right man, at last, in the right place, and they hope he may continue in office as long as he will have it.

T. M. STOKES.

Radical leaders, white and colored, have busied themselves on every occasion to prejudice the colored people against the present administration of State and county affairs, using always such matters upon which the masses are most sensitive. They were told that freedom would be taken from them until it became an old
